With regard to Mr. Blunck's personal remarks respecting my command of money to purchase the best specimens produced in England, discounting any credit due to me in the birds I annually exhibit, all I can say is that he is mistaken if he thinks I have followed his plan in buying birds with records on the other side, which, as a rule, are useless for stock purposes. When I import I buy stock birds, not show birds, and advise everybody else to do the same. The most success that has been attained in our yards has been in Birchens and White Game Bantams, and I have never imported a Birchen to cost more than £4, and the White Bantams we have been showing and winning with, the original stock I purchased in England some four years ago at an average of the princely sum of 10s. each, in American money $2.50, so that it does not take anyone to be a millionaire to get on equal terms with us as breeders. The secret is to know where to go to get what you want.

With regard to my claim that I am in control of the most extensive and best stock of Game Bantams in America today, a claim which Mr. Blunck is inclined to question, I will simply ask my friend to name one equal or with such a record of winnings for the past five years at our leading shows. In making the statement I did in my reply to Mr. Crowe's strictures, it was simply to refute his impertinence in suggesting that I should resign as a member of the American Game and Game Bantam Club, and not with any desire to crow over others in the Fancy less fortunately situated than I am for the raising of Game and Variety Bantams. Those who know me best know I am not built that way. Good goods need no puff, only job lots and rubbish.

The Poultry Business as an Industry.

[A Series of Special Articles written expressly for the AMERICAN FANCIER by HENRY M. LADD, proprietor of Crescent Farm, Cleveland, Ohio.]

I.

Most people have a very small idea of the poultry business. Of course they are ignorant on the subject and therefore need enlightenment as well as pity. "Umph! Nothing but chickens," was the disdainful remark of a lady, overheard as she stood before a magnificent display of some of the finest stock ever seen. She could not appreciate what she saw, at best they were nothing but chickens to her at so much a pound The sight of them suggested butchers and cooks, or worse yet, filth and bad smells. Chickens? Chickens indeed! The public, the intelligent public, are rapidly being educated to a better view. There are two forms in which this prejudice shows itself, one is in regard to the birds themselves, the other is in regard to the business. A chicken to most of these prejudiced people is a nuisance. The former despises the chickens, for they roost on his buggy, they foul his harness, they dig up his corn, and he tolerates them only for the women folks. He built them a house and takes care of them himself? Not he! He couldn't bother with the trash. The women folks can fuss with them if they want to and can get a little pin money from the eggs. But he is a man, why should he stop to putter over a few chickens? The people in town despise chickens. The neighbors have a few and they are always scratching up the garden and getting upon the veranda. "Shoo! Shoo! Set the day on those chickens, I'd just like to wring their pesky necks."

Then in regard to the business there is immense ignorance. People smile when you talk about it as a leading industry, they seem to think that some people are fooling with chickens because they do not know any better, and that such fools will soon be parted from their money. They look upon it possibly as a sort of recreation and amusement which a few can afford if they have money to burn. But as a great, profitable and leading industry they never dreamed of such a thing, and yet that is just what it is. It is a greater business than the wheat business of the country. To-day it is estimated at $500,000,000. It ranks thus among the first in the amount of money invested and the returns in products marketed. The national government has recognized it as among the most important industries to foster and protect. The number of people engaged in the industry and the number of dollars earned, place it easily among the foremost industries of the country. Scores of journals finely conducted, devoted entirely to poultry, are supporting the industry, and these journals are fully equal if not superior to any published in the interests of any other industry, or even of literature and art. The five hundred annual poultry shows involving thousands of dollars and millions of people, to say nothing of the state and county fairs, attest the interest that attaches to this industry, and it is constantly growing, new egg farms, broiler plants and poultry farms are springing up all over the country and yet the demand increases faster than the supply, and prices are gradually growing higher and holding longer each year. The fact is, this is a tremendously growing country and the cities are growing out of all proportion to the rest of the country, and in these cities the demand for first-class poultry and eggs is increasing even more rapidly than the size of the cities. There is no more profitable business, if properly handled, and it is growing more profitable each year. This business must without question be admitted to be one of the foremost, one of the largest and one of the most important industries of our times, alluring in its nature, scientifically interesting and instructive in its study, fascinating to the fancier in all its phases, it is dignified in its sober earnestness and exalted in its results as a money maker. A business worthy from every point of view to rank as a foremost industry of our day.

Pure Bred Fowls.

What's the use, someone will ask, of raising pure-bred fowls instead of common chickens? We answer by asking what is the use of raising Jersey cows instead of piney-woods scrub stock, or what is the use of raising Essex hogs instead of razorbacks or thoroughbred horses instead of marsh tackeys? One has only to look over the mongrel flocks of chickens at home and at the homes of his neighbors and then at the pure-bred fowls in the chicken show for an answer. There are symmetry of form, beauty of plumage and increase in weight. Such chickens are a delight to the eye, even if there were not a single other advantage.—Augusta Chronicle.

Danger For Rhode Island Reds.

CALL FOR VERY DARK BIRDS.

During the improvement of the Reds, fanciers have differed in their views as to the best type and color to work for. The new Buff Rock and Wyandotte Standard has influenced their work altogether too much. As the new buff breeds come pretty red for some time, it is considered best to breed the real Reds darker than they naturally were, to make them dissimilar. Other reasons have made the tendency to change their color very strong. One has been due to a misunderstanding on the part of buyers as to what the real color of a Rhode Island Red male and female should be. When Reds of the natural color were sent into other sections, the buyer, judging from the name, expected to receive Red females that matched the males, while the females are naturally reddish yellow or buff. Disappointed buyers, who had been sold buff stock, or who thought their genuine females not of the right color, called for very dark males to counteract the females' color, or bought again specifying that they receive very dark red females. This general demand for very dark birds causes breeders to breed them darker and darker, much darker than is natural and much darker than is desirable, I believe. Had no birds bred to buff Standard been sold as Reds, and all buyers been informed that males and females ought not to match in color, no such radical change would have taken place. Had there been no Buff Rocks or Wyandottes made from Red stock, breeders would not have been forced to breed as they have, and there would have been no question about whether Reds should be admitted to the American Standard.

With their causes understood, the natural difference between the male and female fully recognized, and the Standard built accordingly, the danger of breeding to an undesirable, extreme color, that would lessen the attractiveness of the male, or cause fanciers to adopt double matings to produce show birds that will match, can be avoided. I hope this will be done eventually. That it is desirable to make the females redder than their original color, I believe, but it should be done by deepening and brightening the natural colors, rather than by changing the color and doing away with the contrast between upper and lower portions of the body. The most attractive females I have ever seen, those that showed the brightest and most lively colors, and that faded least at any season or when old, had bright red necks with lighter breasts and other parts, the neck being darkest and gradually shading off to other portions. This sort of color would, probably, in breeding, also help in securing the desired color in the males' hackle. When the first Rhode Island Red Club Standard was formed, the tendency to breed out the black in females' hackle was corrected by requiring a slight amount of black in hackle. The last revision at Boston leaves out "slight," therefore calls for more distinct black. These markings black in hackle and tail that Standard now calls for, with this deep red in neck, are natural markings, and would sufficiently distinguish the females from the buff breeds, and there would be no call for breeding the whole body one dark, even color, which some fancier judges are doing their best to encourage.

LOSS OF PRESTIGE AS DRESSED POULTRY.

Among the improved Reds as now bred, may still be found many different types. Some are bred of Leghorn shape and weight, having similar nervous organization and high tails, slender upright bodies, slender necks, legs, and with great tendency to white ear-lobes These are distinctly an egg type, and while they like Leghorns, make good small broilers, are hard to fatten when older, and are not of much account as dressed chickens or fowl. Other types can hardly be told from Wyandottes in shape, and a type very much like the Plymouth Rock is seen. Other strains resemble Langshans and Cochins in shape and general carriage and weight. They lay rich-tinted eggs, are very hardy and heavy when dressed. It has lately gone out from certain quarters, from not entirely disinterested parties, that Rhode Island Reds are not satisfactory dressed poultry, that they belong to the egg class, do not make good dressed poultry, and are not an all-purpose fowl. This is certainly true if you judge them by the Leghorn type; it is another matter if you judge them by the Wyandotte type or American Dominique type. Then you will not see much difference between them and Wyandottes, except they have longer bodies and not quite so long necks and legs, and are a little smaller and quicker to mature. Judging them by the 10 and 12-pound Cochin or Langshan type, they are solid as anything, good heavy dressed poultry stock, just the thing for hardy winter chickens and roasters. It all depends upon the type you judge them by. I favor the type about between the Cochin and American Dominique; wider and plumper than Plymouth Rocks and shorter on their legs. As plump as Wyandottes but longer in body and wider in the back, not quite so coarse in form or long in neck or legs. Not quite so square and low on legs as Dorkings. The new Standard adopted at last Boston Show contains nothing different from the old one in regard to type. It calls for the shape peculiar to varieties of the American class, and a long keel. Specifies that Rock or Wyandotte shape is not required.

No breed of the American class does or should carry body upright, or has large tails or carries them high. The Leghorn type is certainly not called for. When the judge who has lately placed awards on Reds at Boston looks the birds over he generally compares their body to an oblong card. This shows his idea of outline shape. He has an ideal that the accepted Standard hardly hints at. Why should this ideal be kept secret? Why not express it in the Standard, and then tie judges down to it? Same with all other fine points. Why not give breeders the country over the same chance to breed to the highest ideals that those who meet this judge personally have? Is it desirable to have a wide-open, easy Standard published, that will not prevent the sale of low-grade Reds for good ones, and an unwritten one that is known to few but in reality governs judges and experienced breeders and exhibitors?—Samuel Cushman in Poultry Monthly.

The Origin of the Faverolle Fowl.

[Translated from the French by JOSEPH B. THOMAS, JR.]

Let us go back some fifty years. The inhabitants of the little town of Faverolle, in Central France, then only possessed fowls of the "race commune," as a French author terms them, and the Houdan. About this time there appeared on the scene the large, heavily feathered Cochins, the Brahma and the English Dorking. The demand for these fowls was excessive and promiscuous use was made of the males of these breeds to make crosses with the common fowl and especially with the Houdan. From these crosses, made without method, there originated heterogenous specimens, but having preserved the size and the strength of their parents on the male side, yet retaining the extreme delicacy of flesh and tremendous laying ability of their maternal line. In spite of the mixed crosses, one could perceive some well fixed characteristics. One would see in the Faverolle fowl the Cochin with its buff feathering and heavy appearance the Brahma with its pencilling, the mottle of the Houdan, and finally the Dorking with its salmon breast and five toes. Quoting the words of a French writer: "They have the size, the blocky appearance, and the delicacy of flesh which make the fatted chickens from Faverolles, sold on the market as fatted chickens from Houdans, most particularly sought after. This breed is then to be especially recommended from a utility standpoint for a lucrative production. Let us add that the Faverolle chicks are of a rusticity which is quite exceptional."

See Bright (a New Poet).

A friend of mine wrote a verse,
Quite a "poem," very terse;
Quinius, Zimmer, Bridge and Story,
He rather dimmed all their glory.

This new "poet," from "Wearytown,"
Is also seeking great renown;
He gives his name, so good and right,
And calls himself a "C Bright."

A famous bird is the "Sebright" Game,
And our new friend, C. Bright's, his name;
We suppose it is reputation
He's trying to get in this nation.

In his verse five he seeks a "rest,"
And still he's filled with the poet's zest
To show his thoughts and his rhyme
In this, the fierce, hot summer time.

He says "to stop" ere 'tis too late,
And thus avoid an unhappy fate;
And still he writes verses five,
We read them all and still survive.

Brother, dear, the "Golden Rule,"
Don't forget it when out of school;
It's good old law 'tis well to know,
And to your friends "do spare your blow."

We all are human, each tries his way,
In prose or verse, his thoughts to say;
To Maunder, Bridge, or any other,
Be kind to all, "Love your brother."

As for me, I wish this new friend
Best "good luck," which here I send;
And your hard words we all forgive,
And hope in "Jersey" you long will live.

Your friend,

Show at Trenton, N. J.

The New Jersey Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association have about completed the details for their coming show, to be held in Trenton, N. J., December 10th to 14th. Officers and members are working hard to make this the largest show ever held in the State, and if assurances of entries from all over the country count, it will easily lead all others. The well known and able George B. Randolph will act as superintendent. The services of the following popular judges have been secured: McGrew, Parker, Purdue, Nevius, Ungerer and Stanton on poultry, Jager on waterfowl, and Tiemann, Stanton, Kennedy, and another yet to be selected will place the ribbons on pigeons. This assures breeders that their stock will be handled right and the ribbons placed where they belong. A premium list can be had for the asking

PIGEONS.

Lofty Thoughts of the Editor

During this hot spell those who wish to keep clear of canker and lice will have to keep a close look out, for it is surprising how quickly young can become choked up with the former, especially if fresh water is not regularly given to them, and then it must be kept out of the sun, for in my opinion, no matter how many times you give them fresh water, they will be liable to this worst of all pigeon diseases if the water is allowed to become warm with the rays of the sun. Should, after such precautions as I have given, some be found with it, the best remedy known for a cure is a preparation of nitrate of silver and water, which any druggist can put up in short notice. Swab out the throat with this two or three times a day. Many cases can be cured, while with some nothing seems to be able to check the disease.

For lice the problem is much more simple, and the chief remedy is in using a preventive, as plenty of "elbow grease" will usually keep them down. Cleanliness will usually keep these pests to young pigeons clear, but should they get established there are any number of different remedies that will clean them out temporarily. Plenty of whitewash does not agree with them, and by having a small pail on hand, a dab around the inside of the nesting places is good; then, if nest pans are used, change young into a clean one and subject the one with lice to a one-fourth cup of kerosene oil and you will not find much live stock left in a few minutes after, though they make frantic efforts to get away from it. The breeder who can keep clear of these two troubles will breed pigeons this weather "like mice," as the old saying goes.

Saturday, upon invitation of Mr. Twombly, I went out with him to look over his birds, see the Boston Terriers, and take a drive around Medford, and while the unusual weather we have had has done its work with the young Dragoons, with one or two exceptions it seems to have agreed with breeding operations in the dog line. We found a young Grizzle Dragoon that is very liable to be among the winners, being good in head, stout and straight in beak, and the approved peppering of this fashionable color in the Dragoon family. We also saw a young Blue that promises well. The dog end is known as Craddock Kennels, and the writer was so impressed with some of the stock that he trundled one home in a basket, with visions of a first and special at the next Boston dog show. After a drive around to several lofts, I was landed at the Elevated, and was much pleased with my afternoon's enjoyment.

There is a rumor about, that the American Jacobin Club has voted to meet with the Boston show next winter, and if this proves correct I am sure they will see the wisdom of doing so later on. There is no more liberal managed show in this country to-day, and while there is annually a large number of visiting fanciers present, had they an idea of the hospitality and general desire to give the boys the glad hand, there would be an annual pilgrimage to Boston by all who like shows, pigeons and genuine pigeon fanciers. It is also rumored that there is going to be more Jacks shown from members of the Club than have ever been shown on this side before, some putting it at four hundred, while one fancier says there will be nearer five hundred, and both estimates based upon a canvas of the members.

The pigeon that seems to need bringing out at our shows lately is the Fan. Why fanciers are so particular as to who is judge, and no two should be able to agree as to who he shall be, is a conundrum to some. This exhibitor won't show if that man judges and the other won't show if the other one does, so that there is a Chinese puzzle as to who will suit enough to get out the birds of the best lofts. If there was a little more sporting blood in some I think there would be more Fans shown.

Revised Belgian Hare Standard.

The American Revised Standard of Excellence for Belgian Hares.

Adopted by the National Belgian Hare Club of America, June 8, 1901.

DISQUALIFICATIONS.

1. Lopped or fallen ear or ears.
2. White toe or toes, white front foot or feet; white bar or bars on same.
3. Decidedly crooked front foot or feet, leg or legs.
4. Wry tail or absence of tail.
5. Specimen blind in one eye.
6. Mature specimen short of five pounds in weight.
7. Diseased animals, same to be thrown out by receiving committee on entering the show room. A specimen should have the benefit of any doubt.

SIZE.

	Points.
Size of Specimen.—A mature specimen, (10 months of age) should weigh as much as 7½ pounds	5
Size of eyes should be large, comparative to size of specimen	2
Length of ears should be as long as five inches when specimen is rated	2
Length of front limbs should be long in forearms comparative to size of specimen	2
Length of hind limbs should be long comparative to size of specimen	2

SHAPE.

Shape of neck and breast should be firm, with no loose skin pendent in the form of a pouch or dewlap	10
Shape of Head.—Unitormly long, narrow and not too deep, comparative to size of specimen	4
Length of Body.—Very long in vertebræ, between coupling of hips and point of shoulder blades	4
Shape of Flank and Ribs.—Should have flanks well tucked up, ribs well curved, thus showing a cylinder-shaped body, said cylinder to be comparatively small in circumference for the weight of the animal. A specimen much larger around the body at point of stomach than it is at point of heart is defective, as pouchy or kangaroo shape is undesirable	4
Arch of Back—should be slightly and evenly arched, free from abrupt projections at rump or from flat or concave places; in short, a regular, unbroken curve	2
Roundness of Loin.—Should be full and well rounded	2
Shape of Eyes.—Should be round and bold, free from encroachment by lids or a flat, retreating appearance	2
Carriage and Shape of Ears—Should be well set on and persistently held in graceful style. When the attention of the animal is not attracted forward the ears should habitually take a position that lines up the three positions, viz: One-fourth inch back of nostrils, on nose; one-half inch forward from apex of skull, on head; and adopted ear mark No. 3, on ear; which is at beginning of perfect ear lacing on thick edge of ear. The ears should not be broad or spoon-shaped, but when posed, neatly folded and persistently carried together at tips	2
Shape of Front Limbs—Should be straight in bone and firm in joint, neither coaching to one side nor the other, nor weakening down at joint appreciably when tested	2

COLOR.

Ticking Effect.—Ticking is the black points on the red hairs of the Belgian. Surface effect is what is considered. Three things are necessary to produce the desired effect, viz: Quantity, quality and distribution. The quantity should be in a proportion of 25 per cent. of black to 75 per cent. of rufus red. In quality we wish the most pronounced black and the most distinct red obtainable in order to produce the necessary contrast in color. As to distribution the black should be distributed in tones or waves over the red back-ground, which gives a very pleasing effect. Ticking effect should be viewed as a whole from a position at right angles to surface of arch at point of couplings on rump	10
Stray Hairs.—Colored sections of the animal should not be encroached upon by having white hairs contained therein, thus marring the beauty of their respective requirements.
Body Color—Is hereby construed to mean the parts of the Belgian that are not otherwise provided for by this Standard and have special reference to back, above side color and above and back of color on hindquarters, also to head and breast. Rich rufus red is the required color, defined by Webster as being a reddish brown red, perhaps more clearly defined by describing it as a deep cherry red carrying a dull, rust effect. The head may carry a very small amount of ticking and the breast should be entirely free from it	5
Color of Sides—Should be 60 per cent. of absolute perfection of body in color and should be carried well down to a distinct junction with belly color	4
Color of Hindquarters—Should be 60 per cent. of absolute perfection in side color or 36 per cent. of absolute perfection in body color. Should be considered from standpoint of surface color and depth of color as well	4
Color of Hind Feet—Should be a clear golden rufus, with no tendency to white on top or bluish or smudgy cast at side	4
Color Under Jaws—Should be a rich, deep cream color, not to show out noticeably when viewed at an angle of 50 degrees elevation	2
Color of Belly—Should be a bright cream; neither a pure white nor a deep or cinnamon color	2
Color of Eyes—Should be a rich color, resembling somewhat a finely penciled chestnut shade of brown	2
Lacing of Ears—Should begin on thick edge of the ear, one-fourth way from tip to base and should extend round the point of the ear to slightly past, an equal distance down the thin edge of the ear. Should be a jet black and confined closely to the edge of the ear, averaging about twice the width on the thick edge that it does on the thin edge.
Ear Color—Should be a bright golden shade of rufus and entirely free from ticking; neither should it be encroached upon by ear lacing beyond the proper location for same.	2
Color of Front Limbs—Should be a rich, rufus red, free from ticking and smudginess	2

QUALITY.

Quality of Eyes—Should be bright and expressive, indicative of health and vigor	2 die by being lousy than from any other cause. You can talk about improper care and food, lack of green food and grit, but, when looking for the root of the trouble look for lice, and when you find them look into the merits of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies. Rev. H. H. Purrington, Mt. Vernon, Maine, writes: "We all use Death to Lice and find it most satisfactory." The Norton Poultry Yards, Dallas, Texas. writes: "We have been using your Death to Lice for the past four years and it has given entire satisfaction."

MORE CHICKENS

have head lice than most poultry keepers realize. Some think that these little pests are pin feathers on the top of a chicks' head and do not take the trouble to examine them closely until the broods begin to die off. One Massachusetts fancier says that it cost him hundreds of dollars to learn this. Death to Lice Ointment is made especially for the extermination of these little blood suckers, without injury to the little chicks. 100 doses 10c postpaid.

MORE CHICKENS

than should go into two coops are often crowded into one. The lice will then crowd into these small quarters and assist to make the nights long, hot and miserable. The little mites or spider lice crawl out of the cracks and crevices and extract more blood from the chicks than they can make during the day. Charles L. Evans, Wood River, Neb., writes: "I have given your 'special' a thorough trial. I had a henhouse that was polluted with mites. I mixed one (four) ounce box of special to one gallon of whitewash and gave it a thorough whitewashing. I now defy anyone to find a louse about my hen house."

MORE CHICKENS

properly cared for mean more money. Proper care means a liberal use of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies as well as suitable food and housing. No poultry keeper ever failed because he put too much money into Death to Lice. Many do fail because they do not keep their flocks free from vermin. The most successful money-making poulterers are those who use the most Lamberts. We have remedies for all kinds of lice, on anything and everything. We put it up in all sizes of packages to suit all kinds of people. We have all kinds of good testimonials as to its efficacy.

STUPENDOUS FORTUNES MADE IN OIL!

Rockefeller with his hundreds of millions easily heads the list, but there are scores of others unheard of whose fortunes range up in the millions.

California is rapidly coming to the front in Oil Production. The past two years has seen a remarkable advance in value of Oil Company Shares, being all the way from a few dollars to $100, $200 and $300 a share, and in the Home Oil Co., to over $4,000 a Share.

Hundreds of people have made more money the past year in California Oil Fields than they ever dreamed they would be worth.—[FINANCIAL RECORD, Oct. 3, 1900.

One company paid last year $175,000 in dividends on a capital stock of $100,000, and land which could have been bought a year ago for $5 an acre, has by virtue of oil advanced to $30,000 an acre. —[LOS ANGELES HERALD.

More fortunes will be made in California oil investments within the next two years than the most enthusiastic would have dared to predict. The time to buy oil stocks is before the price shoots up to hundreds and perhaps thousands of dollars a share.

—[FINANCIAL TIMES.

A GILTEDGED INVESTMENT.

MT. SHASTA OIL AND DEVELOPMENT CO., OF SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A Legitimate Company with men of honor and ability at its head. -;- Work rushed night and day. Development work is being pushed as fast as men and money can do so. -:- Oil may be struck at any moment. The quality found in this district is of a very high grade, commanding the highest market prices.

GREAT FORTUNES HAVE BEEN MADE!

Hundreds, yes, thousands, have been made wealthy during the past year through wise investments in oil. We offer to the eastern public the same or a similar opportunity. Grasp it while you can. To-morrow may be too late.

10,000 Shares For Sale at 65cts. Per Share.

To give you an illustration of the rapid rise in value of oil stocks we quote the following, only a few of the vast number, and their advances were all made within one year, some less than four months.

The following will suffice to illustrate what "quick action" means on an investment and where the profits begin from the day oil is struck:

El Dorado Oil Company, first cost	$ 50	now	$ 5 00
Kern River Oil Company, first cost	1 00	now	16 00
Independent Oil Company, first cost	1 00	now	3 00
Blue Goose Oil Company, first cost	25 00	now	41 00
New York Oil Company, first cost	10 00	now	200 00
Home Oil Company, first cost	100 00	now	5000 00

Do not delay. The price may advance any day.

The officers and directors are men of sterling integrity, well known and respected in the community where they reside. They have organized and put their own money into this company, with a firm purpose to make it a success and one of the big dividend payers of the state. Gentlemen, while we advise caution, the early bird gets the worm. Stock you buy to-day for $100.00 may cost you $1,000 to-morrow, or even $10,000. Order at once.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

WHAT SAVED JUDGE CLARK'S CHICKENS.

Scotch Plains, N. J., Sept. 13, 1900—Judge Clark, when not dispensing law and dealing out justice, devotes a great deal of his time to raising chickens and ducks. About two weeks ago his fowls were attacked with a disease which began carrying them off at an alarming rate, notwithstanding all his efforts to check the epidemic. Several authorities on chickens were consulted and it was agreed that the fowls were suffering from some form of cholera. A remedy was at last found to check the disease. This was procured from the Star Incubator Co., of Bound Brook, and it proved to be just the thing, and the Judge is once more happy and will begin at once to replenish his stock.

STUPENDOUS FORTUNES MADE IN OIL.

Rockefeller with his hundreds of millions easily heads the list, but there are scores of others unheard of whose fortunes range up in the millions.

California is rapidly coming to the front in Oil Production. The past two years has seen a remarkable advance in value of Oil Company Shares, being all the way from a few dollars to One Hundred, Two Hundred and Three Hundred Dollars a share, and in the Home Oil Company to over $4,000 a share.

Hundreds of people have made more money the past year in California Oil Fields than they ever dreamed they would be worth —[Financial Record, Oct. 3, 1900.

One company paid last year $175,000 in dividends on a capital stock of $100,000, and land which could have been bought a year ago for $5 an acre has, by virtue of oil, advanced to $30,000 an acre.—[Los Angeles Herald.

More fortunes will be made in California oil investments within the next two years than the most enthusiastic would have dared to predict. The time to buy oil stocks is before the price seoots up to hundreds and perhaps thousands of dollasr a share.—[Financial Times.

GREAT FORTUNES HAVE BEEN MADE.

Hundreds, yes, thousands, have been made wealthy during the past year through wise investments in oil. We offer to the eastern public the same or a similar opportunity. Grasp it while you can.

To-morrow may be too late.

10,000 SHARES FOR SALE AT 50 CENTS PER SHARE!

To give you an illustration of the rapid rise in value of oil stocks we quote the following, only a few of the vast number, and their advances were all made within one year, some less than 4 mos.

The following will suffice to illustrate what "quick action" means on an investment and where the profits begin from the day oil is struck:

El Dorado Oil Co., first cost	$ 50	now	$ 5 00
Kern River Oil Company, first cost	1 00	now	16 00
Independent Oil Company, first cost	1 00	now	3 00
Blue Goose Oil Company, first cost	25 00	now	41 00
New York Oil Company, first cost	10 00	now	200 00
Home Oil Company, first cost	100 00	now	5000 00

Do not delay. The price may advance any day.

The officers and directors are men of sterling integrity, well known and respected in the community where they reside. They have organized and put their own money into this company, with a firm purpose to make it a successful and one of the big dividend payers of the state. Gentlemen, while we advise caution, the early bird gets the worm. Stock you buy to-day for $100.00 may cost you $1,000.00 to-morrow, or even $10,000.000. Order at once. TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION LABEL FULTON COUNTY No. 286

SATURDAY JULY 27 1901

From the Editor's Perch.

M. S. Gardner, Philadelphia, N. Y., was in this city last week and established an agency for the Cyphers Incubator Co. with Frank Miller, a prominent hardware and supply merchant. Mr. Gardner has accepted a position with the Cyphers company, and informed us that the latter will remove their factory to new and commodious quarters located at Buffalo, N. Y.

O. J. Rulliffson, of Rochester, N. Y., also paid us a flying visit and stopped over a night with F. B. Zimmer at Gloversville. Mr. Rulliffson has an attack of Beagle fever and may start in with a kennel next fall. But he still has Brahmas and Bantams and expects to show a pretty good sized string next fall and winter.

M. V. Caldwell, Leetonia, Ohio, advises us that he will sell out his entire stock of Polish, Bantams, Turkeys, Ducks and Geese, including all his crack show birds. This move on his part is due to poor health and other business.

George G. Brown, proprietor of Roycroft Farm, East Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "I am glad to say that I have received very satisfactory results from my ad. in the American Fancier, and to advise you that I have about 800 head of the finest White Wyandottes I have ever raised and expect to crowd some of the boys in the corner during the winter shows." We have no doubt about that, as Mr. Brown made it pretty warm last season for all his competitors. We are sorry to learn, however, that he will dispose of all his White Plymouth Rocks, the latter being up to an equally high standard with his White Wyandottes It will certainly be a good opportunity for White Rock breeders to secure some choice stock.

Under date of July 21, Fred. Maunder, Buffalo, writes: "I have some Cornish Indian Game, Old English Game, and White Game Bantam eggs hatching in a 'Successful' incubator at the Pan-American Exposition grounds. These eggs were imported from Frank Rice, Suffolk, England." "Fred" also makes a few pertinent remarks re the Pan in another column of this issue.

The Rural New Yorker, in speaking of the poor progress a lot of chickens made while occupying a greenhouse, says:

"It is not agreeable to record failure where success should be confidently expected, but an examination into the conditions will usually reveal an error or omission accounting for the lack of success. Those chickens failed to thrive after the first week. Their appetites grew less, until the daintiest food was regarded with aversion, the growth was checked, the skin became dry and harsh, and the feathers staring. They seemed to be feverish and developed an insatiable thirst. There was generally an idiotic appearance, if such may be attributed to a chick, while the usual apathetic lassitude was varied by sudden aimless starts. A general paralysis soon followed and deaths began to occur. As the care and conditions of temperature seemed quite ideal, the case appeared rather puzzling until the similarity of the symptoms to nicotine poisoning in young victims of the cigarette habit was noted. The benches of the greenhouse were crowded with tender plants and the dull weather had favored the extension of green-fly or aphids so that repeated night fumigations of tobacco stems were needed to hold the pests in check. While the chickens were always carefully removed during a fumigation and not replaced as long as there was a visible trace of smoke, enough nicotine saturated the soil and air seriously to injure the chicks and keep them in a state of semi-intoxication. As soon as provision could be made elsewhere they were removed, and quickly recovered appetites and interest in life."

No doubt the tobacco fumes were the cause of the trouble stated above, but raising young chickens in a greenhouse temperature is a pretty dangerous practice, even without any tobacco. The latter used as dust or powder on chickens used to roaming in the open air has never injured them as far as we know. It is confinement in an unnatural temperature that makes the fumes of tobacco or any other preparation injurious to tender chickens.

The Rural New Yorker comes to the conclusion that:

"With the exception of those manifestly too far gone before removal, all made good recoveries, but they remain stunted in growth. All who have closely noted the appearance of a youth addicted to tobacco will recognize the portrait. It has been well settled by medical authorities that tobacco is always injurious to young and undeveloped animals, human or otherwise, though it may be either indifferent or beneficial in a slight degree to the adult. The mother hens were not visibly affected in this case, though the nervous system of the chicks was disordered to the verge of paralysis. Tobacco in any form is a filthy thing, and it would be well if its consumption could be confined to its legitimate use as an insecticide. We shall try hydrocyanic gas next winter. Its use is attended with some danger and inconvenience, but at any rate the lingering and disagreeable odor of tobacco may be avoided. During the spring of 1900 there was less necessity for fumigation, and the broods of chickens under the benches got on splendidly, with no loss."

We think the substitution of hydrocyanic gas for tobacco fumes rather of doubtful value and liable to be attended with considerable danger, besides depriving the mother hens of the luxury of enjoying a good old smoke. At all events, we shall await the experiment with considerable interest and trust Bro. Collingwood will be more successful in raising chickens in a greenhouse than others that have tried it and failed.

Seventeen members of the Adirondack Poultry Club journeyed to Rockwood, N. Y., a distance of eight miles from Johnstown, to attend a special meeting and at the same time enjoy the hospitality of Vice-President W. J. Stahl. The latter as an entertainer scores 100 points. He provided a feast of good things, and the way the chicken cranks of the glove city devoured the plentiful and excellent food spoke volumes for the fine quality of the Adirondack mountain air, as well as for the tempting morsels set before the famished crowd.

Outings of this kind conspire to "bring together" the fanciers of thoroughbred fowl, and much good is derived from the interchange of ideas on breeding, mating and exhibiting.

It was voted at this special meeting of the club to hold a big Glen Island clam bake and field day at Sammons' Grove, 2½ miles distant from this city, on August 14. All fanciers as well as citizens are invited to these annual functions, and the good fellowship prevailing at such in a measure explain the splendid support given to the Johnstown show every winter, and the well known saying, "The real fanciers' show of America is held at Johnstown," is based upon a pretty solid foundation of facts.

Owing to the death of his father, Jesse A. Moon will have entrusted to him the onerous duties of managing the estate left by the deceased, in addition to managing his own business affairs. This compels him to give up the culture of Golden Wyandottes and the chicken business. In consequence thereof, he will dispose of his entire stock of Golden Wyandottes, coops and appliances. This is a very rare opportunity to secure a splendid strain of Goldens, including the winners at New York and elsewhere. The announcement appears on the last page of this issue of the American Fancier.

We often receive inquiries regarding the culture of wood ducks and usually published articles giving the facts on the management of the same in large numbers. That they can be reared in a small yard has seldom been thought feasible, so we take pleasure in reprinting the following editorial comments in the July 12th issue of our esteemed English contemporary Poultry, on this subject:

'There is nothing more contagious than the love of natural history, nor do we believe there is anything more deeply implanted in the human mind than the love of animals. We are not now going into the question why or how this exists, but we wish to remove a difficulty. Many people would like to keep some tame wild fowl, but they think it impossible—they imagine such luxuries form part of the privileges of those who have

Thirty large domains,
Forty grand chateaux,
Fifty fertile plains,
Sixty suits of clothes,
Lots of gold and silver, &c.

"No such thing. We lately saw a pair of Mandarin and a pair of Carolina ducks revelling in luxury. They were tenants of a washing-tub sunk in the ground Nothing can give an idea of the facility with which things can be kept so easily as the description of places where they have been successfully domesticated and reared. Thus, almost the only man who bred both grouse and black game in confinement was an artist living in the suburbs of London, and having a small, long strip of garden which he devoted to them We have no hesitation in saying that there is hardly any place where wild fowl cannot be kept; but as in nine out of ten there are advantages that only require to be made use of, we shall endeavor to describe such a place as may be within reach of all who have a garden and water.

"We do not advise too small a pond. Few people are content with only one pair, although the pond is made for that number only. A round pond, 4 feet in diameter, is quite large enough for one or two pairs of any kind of wild fowl. After the remark we have just made, we need not add we advise, if possible, that it be made larger. It need not be more than 2 feet deep in any part. It may be that depth everywhere except in two places, which will serve as landing places for the birds, and scours on which they may be fed. These will be cut through the bank, so that the ducks can swim out. When they are tired they cannot always climb up a bank, and they drown. The enclosure around the pond must depend on the space that is available, but for one or two pairs, or three, 3 feet clear from the pond all round will be enough, but if there is more so much the better. It should be greensward; and we will mention here a point that escaped us before—the scours or landing-places should be pitched or floored with large gravel stones well rammed down. If this is not done it is a dirty, muddy place; and, as the food will always be thrown here, it is economical. The bird can see and find every grain, whereas, if it is thrown in mud, much of it will be lost.

"Ducks do not require a shady place, but they like one, and, in common with nearly all others, they like a shelter from heat and from wind. If, then, some low branching shrubs can be enclosed, so much the better. Some contrivance should be adopted to enable the pond to be emptied and refilled, that the water may be clean. It is very amusing to watch divers in clear water when they dive after grain that is thrown to them. The fence that surrounds the pond should be 3 feet high, not less—a properly pinioned bird cannot get over this. An inexpensive and safe fence is a wattled hurdle hedge all round. If looked after it will last for years. The grass in the enclosure soon forms a covert enough to hide any duck. The Carolina and Mandarin are the handsomest of all we have in England; both have their admirers."

—Pigeon men and hen men should push the American Fancier. Advertisers claim they get better results than from any other paper.

American Black Minorca Club.

Editor American Fancier: At a called meeting of the American Black Minorca Club at the office of the secretary, on the 15th inst., thirteen new members were elected.

It was decided to give a membership and dues to July 1, 1902, to every Black Minorca breeder, not already a member, that sends in as many as four entries to the club show to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., next December.

The specials offered by club members amount to about $225 to date, and will undoubtedly bring out very large entries. In addition to specials already offered, Dr. W. A. S. Murphy, of Atchison, Kansas, offers $2 cash for best Black Minorca pullet exhibited by club member; also, setting of eggs from his best mating, to be delivered next spring, for best Minorca pen exhibited by club member.

Master Bennie Hilldorfer, Allegheny, Pa., offers $2.50 in gold for best Black Minorca cock bird, open to all exhibitors.

Storing and Preserving Eggs

The abundance of eggs in the spring and summer and their scarcity in most poultry yards in the fall and winter have led to various experiments with a view to their preservation. Those who keep a large number of fowls will find it more profitable not to dispose of their eggs at this time, when prices fall to the lowest, but to preserve some to be used as cooking eggs at the end of the year. The system of egg preservation has not been developed to the extent that its importance would warrant, and there is really no method that can be considered absolutely satisfactory. Whatever process is adopted, it is necessary that the eggs be quite new laid, and there is no doubt that the eggs keep better if they are laid by hens that have had no male bird running with them for at least three weeks. The eggs must not be taken for preserving from a nest that the hen has stolen, for if a stale egg is placed with the others the whole lot will in all probability go wrong. The methods that meet with most favor are preserving the eggs in lime and water, packing them in table salt or in peat mould, or greasing them. In Germany the best results are said to be arrived at by using soluble glass or coating the eggs with vaseline and putting them in lime water. The soluble glass process is sometimes adopted in this country. The mode of using it is as follows To one part of the soluble glass add ten parts of water that has been boiled and allowed to cool; then pour this over the eggs, which have previously been placed in layers in jars. The glass combines with the calcium carbonate of the egg shell and forms a cement that prevents the ingress of the air. Soluble glass is ordinarily used for protecting stone which does not stand the weather well. It can be procured from some builders. The old fashioned method of storing the eggs in lime and water is mostly followed in farms and in country places generally. The eggs treated in this way have the shells somewhat brittle and the surface rough, but otherwise they keep well. There are several recipes for using the lime water. One of the simplest is to add a pint of unslacked lime to each gallon of water. This is boiled, then well stirred, and when cold the clear water is poured into jars which have been filled with new laid eggs. Earthenware vessels are the best, but they must be glazed so as to prevent their absorbing the lime water. The jars should be covered over and a little fresh lime water added from time to time to re place that which evaporates. To preserve eggs in salt jars should be used. A layer of salt is first put in, about two inches deep, next a layer of eggs, the large end downwards, continuing with alternate layers of salt and eggs till the jar is nearly full; then on top place a thick layer of salt, cover with a stone lid and keep in a dry, cool spot.

Greasing the eggs is a method a good deal adopted in some places and much used in France. This is performed by rubbing butter or oil between the hands and smearing the eggs with the grease. Only sufficient grease should be used to close the pores of the eggs, otherwise the eggs may become rancid. These eggs are better if stored in baskets in a dry place, but they must not be shut up in boxes or in a damp situation or they will be liable to turn mouldy.

To preserve eggs in peat mould, the peat is dried and ground fine. The eggs are placed in boxes layer by layer, with alternate layers of peat, until the boxes are filled.

Preserved eggs are occasionally mixed with other eggs and sold as new laid, a practice unfortunately increasing in some districts.

A careful housewife is desirous of possessing a stock of good flavored eggs all the year round. The following is a good recipe for preserving these useful articles many months: Obtain your eggs at the cheapest season and be sure they are quite fresh before putting them aside. Sift a layer of dry ashes into the bottom of a good sized box, rub each egg completely over with vaseline, and stand up separately in the box, large end downwards. When one layer of eggs is in position, sift more ashes to cover them, and so on, till the box is full. Stand aside in a cool place and they will keep 12 months.

A French writer states that he has known chickens to have hatched from eggs that had been kept in varnish prepared and applied as follows: Dissolve some gum-lake (lac) in a sufficient quantity of alcohol to make a slight glaze; put on each egg and when all the eggs are completely dry pack them in bran or wood sawdust, taking care to place the large end upwards and preventing them from damage or rolling about. When the eggs are wanted carefully remove the glaze with some alcohol and they will be found in the same state as when they were enveloped —that is to say, good to eat or to hatch. This method is said to be the best and the most sure that has yet been tried.

N. Y. State Fair and the Pan-American.

The State Fair Commission have made special arrangements with the managers of the Pan-American Exposition in order that there may not be any conflict in connection with the various exhibits, so that anyone desiring to compete for prizes at the Pan-American can also enter the State Fair as well as the Pan-American. There was a possibility at one time that there might be a conflict concerning the time for the judging of cattle, but this has been arranged by fixing the time for judging at the Pan-American on Monday, September 16th, two days after the closing of the State Fair. The managers of the State Fair have arranged for a special fast freight train to take the cattle from the State Fair grounds to Buffalo September 13th, so that there will be ample time to get the cattle in condition for show purposes at the Pan-American September 16th.

Some people thought early in the year that it was bad policy to have both fairs during the present year, but as the law provided for holding the State Fair annually there was no way to avoid it. The managers of the State Fair believe that the fairs will be mutually beneficial. They are of the opinion that Syracuse being so near to Buffalo, many people will be attracted to the State Fair from Buffalo, and in return the State Fair will send many of its visitors to the Pan-American.

Great care was taken by the State Fair Commission to arrange its program so as not to conflict in any way with the Pan-American.

The Water Fowl Club of America.

Editor American Fancier: The vote of the members for annual meeting place has centered on Buffalo, N. Y., and in compliance with the President's orders, the meeting is called for Thursday, October 24th, 1901, members to meet in secretary's office of the poultry building on the fair grounds. Let all brethren who possibly can do so come. It will be the banner meeting of our existence. A large entry and the highest quality of Waterfowl will be a lesson and revelation to us all. It is but once in a lifetime that a chance is given us to see our birds admired by Pan-Americans, and remember, admiring is the first step to purchasing, and if straws tell the wind, it will be a good selling show.

Article 12 of our Rules and By-Laws reads: "Annual dues shall be one dollar and shall become due July 1st in each year." All dues received by the undersigned will be duly credited to you, receipt given by mail, and the amount total to be received will be turned over to the treasurer, to be accounted for at Buffalo, N. Y.

If any of the members desire to contribute cash for payment of the two silver cups already offered as special premiums, the undersigned shall be pleased to receipt for it. Any small amounts will help, and if each one gives 50 cents we shall have a splendid sum to get the special prizes with. Let it always be our aim to save the treasury if we can possibly do so.

Suggestions as to distribution of cash and special prizes are also appreciated.

Special meetings are hereby called for Hagerstown, Md., Boston, Mass., and Philadelphia, Pa., to be held at 3 p. m. on Wednesdays during the week of the show held in the respective places. Meeting place, the secretary's office, located in poultry building.

Yours for successful meetings of water fowl people,

THEO. F. JAGER, Sec'y.

Why We Keep Certain Varieties of Fowls.

[A Series of Special Articles written expressly for the AMERICAN FANCIER by HENRY M. LADD, proprietor of Crescent Farm, Cleveland, Ohio.]

II.

There are poultry farms and poultry farms, each variety with a distinct characteristic of its own. In the strictly fancy trade there are two classes. One is a specialty business; the other is a variety business. The specialist selects one breed and makes everything of it, with the show-room always in view. The variety individual has almost every imaginable variety and novelty under the sun. His aim is not so much the show-room as it is the amateur buyer. He caters largely to the amateur. In the utility and fancy business combined there are also two general classes of farms—those that have some one definite end and aim in view, as egg farms and broiler plants, and those on the other hand that aim to cover all the demands of the utility as well as fancy phases of the business. An egg farm can now be made a very simple and remunerative affair by doing away with the whole complicated and expensive hatching business, male birds, incubators, brooders and all, and buying bred to lay pullets as needed in September for fall and winter layers at less than $1.00 a head, as at least one reliable farm that I know of sells them, keeping these birds two years as egg machines and getting rid of them at the end of the second year.

The broiler plant is just the opposite of an egg farm. Here the emphasis is laid on the incubator. A certain amount of stock of the best broiler variety has to be kept to furnish the eggs for these incubators, and the hatched chickens at broiler age instead of the eggs are sent to market. If the plan is to combine these two results and send both eggs and broilers to market, then, as a rule, two breeds of fowls are needed—White Leghorns for eggs and White Wyandottes for broilers. This does not mean that White Leghorns when properly bred do not make good broilers, or that White Wyandottes do not lay well, but the two breeds are especially fitted for these two things. With these two justly popular breeds one can do almost anything that needs to be done in the utility line. It is a question whether it is wise to go beyond these two, and yet a general poultry farm, like Crescent Farm, must be prepared to meet the usual demands of trade. It is always of interest to some people at least to know the reasons back of the fact. It is reasonable to ask every man the reason of the faith that is in him. Every man should have a reason and be able and willing to give it when demanded. We are willing to do likewise. We keep the following varieties in each case for the reasons briefly specified: White Leghorns, because they lay the greatest number of the largest and best eggs; White Wyandottes, because you can crowd them to broiler weight earlier than other breeds and because their color, weight and build make them the best of broilers; Light Brahmas, because they make the best soft roasters on account of shape and size; Buff Rocks, because they are fine winter layers and dress well for market at all ages; Barred Rocks, because of their great popularity, especially among farmers, as a good all around bird; Buff Cochins, because they are the fancier's choice above all others and command the highest prices for extra fine specimens. With these leading breeds almost every phase of both the utility and fancy business can be well supplied, but each breed must receive separate care and attention and be handled only by experienced breeders in order to produce perfect specimens for the show-room and carry off the prize honors, while their less distinguished brothers are on their way to club room tables or to grace the feasts of private life.

OFFER 200,000 SHARES TREASURY STOCK AT $3.00 PER SHARE.

THE CALIFORNIA KING GOLD MINE COMPANY owns 23 claims in Picacho Basin, four miles from the Colorado River, in California, and twenty miles by direct road from Yuma, Arizona. . . . . .

DEVELOPMENT work has been in progress for six years, and more than ten thousand feet of shafts, drifts levels and cuts have been completed and paid for.

Upwards of fifteen million tons of ore are now ready for the mill, all of which will be mined by open cuts at a nominal cost.

A CONTRACT has been entered into for the erection of a mill and cyanide plant capable of handling 1,000 tons of ore daily, which will be completed this year. The Directors guarantee that this plant will be placed in operation, regardless of the amount of treasury stock subscribed. The net profit after commencing work will exceed $60,000 a month, and probably reach $100,000 a month within a year. The ore in sight will supply such a plant for more than forty years, assuring an annual return of 20 per cent or more on the investment.

There is no promotion stock. No salaries to officers. Every dollar realized from the sale of stock, goes into the treasury to pay for the plant. Reports of J. Ralston Bell, London; William A. Farish, Denver; Emerson Gee, Denver; P.C. DuBois, Berkeley, Cal.; J. L. Shepherd, and others, all eminent mining engineers, strongly recommend this property.

Crisp from the Pan.

Editor American Fancier: Seeing the letter written by "Southerner," which was published in your columns of July 6th, and your answer to same, I became interested and went out to the Pan-American Exposition grounds and showed same to Mr. F. A. Converse, superintendent of live stock. After reading the letter and your answer to same, he wished me to write to your paper and say that, besides Canada and New York State helping their poultry exhibitors, Illinois and Ohio has the same subject under consideration, and it would please Mr. Converse very much if "Southerner" would try and get the State of Maryland to fall in line with New York State. No, the Pan-American is not organized for furnishing a temporary asylum for every judge in this country, but for furnishing a temporary home for the largest and best poultry and pet stock show ever held in modern times.

Fancy Pheasants and Their Allies.

THE JAPAN OR BLACK-WINGED PEAFOWL.

The male of the breed differs from the common Peacock in having the wings black, with a green and blue gloss in places, with the exception of the flights, which are cinnamon but slightly streaked with black; the thighs are also black instead of drab. The hen is white with a black tail, and the upper plumage grizzled and splashed with black; she has the flights cinnamon like the male. The legs in both sexes are white. Young birds are white at first, but the young males soon get dark. This form, which is positively known to appear in either sex as a sport from the ordinary Peafowl, nevertheless breeds true, even with no trouble; it is said, indeed, that if it appears among the common birds, and all are allowed to breed together, the black-winged bird will swamp the other, although smaller and not a match for it, if they come to blows. It would be interesting to know how this comes about. Peahens are known to have strong preference for individual Peacocks, but in the case quoted by Darwin, where this was observed, a bird of this variety was slighted for a pied cock. So that it is possible that the Japan form is prepotent, and that the color is transmitted in such cases through the hens of the variety. The Peahen certainly ought to admire the Japan male bird most, if she uses her eyes at all, for he is certainly a great improvement on the ordinary bird, whose freckled wings always make him look as if he had not moulted out all his immature plumage, or, as an admirer of Peacocks put it to me, they look like a piece of tweed let into a rich costume of silk or satin!

Nevertheless, the Japan Peafowl must be seriously handicapped in the struggle for existence by the pale hue of the hens and chicks, for it is known to occur wild, one hen having been killed in India. But few can live to reach maturity in that country, so full of birds and beasts of prey. My friend Mr. B. B. Osmaston, who is both sportsman and naturalist, tells me that the common Peahen is very hard to see when sitting in the jungle, as might be expected from her drab color, but it is obvious that pale birds would stand no chance, and the Rajah who goes in for white Peafowl must "preserve" very carefully. The black-winged Peafowl is also wild in Japan, though naturalists do not admit that country as a habitat of the species. Probably it was introduced very long ago, and has been able to maintain itself in a country less dangerous than India. I got my information as to its occurrence there from Mr. Rutledge, and there is a Japanese specimen in the Paris Museum. Of course, if Japanese Peafowl were known to occur wild nowhere else, and never to be produced from tame common Peafowl, they would be a true species. As it is, we know their origin, and so they are called only a breed or variety. So it is that, apart from the superior beauty of both sexes to the common birds, this form of Peacock is one of the most interesting of all birds, as it shows us that new species can arise suddenly from others.

THE GREEN OR JAVAN PEAFOWL.

This species, the "Spicifer Peacock" of dealers, is very distinct from the common Peafowl in several points. It is a bigger bird, and more reachy in build; the crest, which inclines forward, is much longer and narrower, and composed of narrow rounded feathers webbed nearly all the way down. The neck feathers have firm clearly-defined edges, giving a scaly appearance to that part of the plumage, like that of the back; the bare skin of the face is blue to below the eyes, yellow below and behind; and the legs and bill are darker than in the other bird. Moreover, the hen in this species nearly resembles the cock; she is merely smaller, has no train, and no metallic green on the back.

Except for the scaly bronze-green neck plumage, the cock's coloring resembles that of the black winged breed of the common species, his wings and thighs being black; his train, however, has more of the copper and purple gloss about it.

The hen's upper tail coverts are glossy green coarsely pencilled with brown; and the cock, which does not carry his train long after the breeding season, is said to then assume similar ones.

I have never seen very young birds of this species, but two of about the size of Pheasants I saw lately were already miniatures of the old hen, and very pretty they looked.

This species extends from Chittagong, in the eastern part of India, through Burma to Java. It seems to have been first known, however, from Japan, and, I am told, is wild there. I certainly have the same evidence of this as I mentioned in the case of the black-winged fowl, and the green occurs in Japanese art; but naturalists are silent about it, it may be only an introduction.

The green Peacock may fairly claim to be the most beautiful of all known birds, as it certainly much exceeds the ordinary species in beauty and elegance of form. Its neck feathering, if less rich in hue than the blue of its rival, has a particularly beautiful effect, as it is formed of metal work, and the almost equal beauty of the hen places her far above the dowdy mate of the common bird, and even above the delicate-looking female of the Japan breed. Like the latter, she has cinnamon flights like the male bird.

The present bird is not so numerous, where it occurs wild, as the ordinary Peacock is in India; and it is not very common in captivity, though often obtainable from dealers.

It is more delicate, at any rate in the East, and the male in full plumage is apt to be extremely savage. At the same time, birds of this species are often charmingly tame. I know of one at present which will let itself be picked up like a cat, and have seen another which would gladly stand to have its head scratched. It is evidently a bird of character.

The Javan and Indian Peafowls have been crossed both in India and in Europe; but the hybrid, of which a specimen can be seen in the Natural History Museum at South Kensington, does not present any noteworthy point of beauty as compared with pure specimens of either kind. I have been told on good authority that attempts made in India to cross the green Peafowl with the white variety of the common bird were unsuccessful, which reminds one of the objection recorded of some green-colored Finches to yellow Canary hens.

Before leaving the subject of Peafowl I may be permitted to allude to a belief current among the native fellow countrymen of both the Indian and the Burmese species, that these birds and tigers affect the same localities. The fact seems well established, but the reason is not so easy to discover. Possibly the same style of jungle, etc., suits both creatures; or the tiger watches the birds with a view to dinner; or, which is at least equally likely, the Peafowl keep an eye on "stripes" to see what he will be up to next—a custom which several animals are known to follow with regard to their dreaded enemy.

Peafowl have no very near allies, but a certain resemblance, which may quite possibly be due to relationship, is found in the Argus and Peacock pheasants or Polyplectrons, with which I shall therefore deal in the next chapter. Darwin, indeed, gives a long and interesting sketch of the way in which a Peacock might have been evolved out of a bird of the latter kind, assuming that the hens always selected the handsomest mate among those available for many generations.—F. Finn, B. A., F. G. S., in the Feathered World.

Lady Alington's White Farm and Bantams.

Lady Alington may be said to have established a dual reputation in the farming world—one for her White farm, which is one of the curiosities of Dorsetshire, England, the other for her successful Bantams, which have become so famous that no show seems to be quite complete without them. The cows which are kept at this model farmstead are (says The Profitable Farm and Garden) as pure white as they can be found, and the sheep are the same. The stables hold white horses and ponies, and a pure white mule was a gift to Lady Alington from the Sultan of Turkey, who also presented her with two magnificent blanche peacocks, who sun themselves in their radiant plumage in the yard. Some white Indian doves nestle among the eaves, and from the white pigeon cote in the very centre of the yard flutter a flock of white feathered pigeons. To many, however, the great attraction at Crichel is to be found in Lady Alington's famous Bantams, the birds which have won more prizes, perhaps, than any others, not only at home, but in France, Germany and Belgium. Lady Alington is, moreover, a keen gardener, and she devotes a great deal of time to the cultivation of the huge malmaison carnations, the sweet scented violets, and the forget-me-nots, which are all specialties at Crichel.

New Century Ideas.

The Toronto Exhibition, to be held from August 26th to September 7th, announces that its principal characteristic will be the adoption of New Century Ideas. The phrase might be considered a bit indefinite but for the fact that contemporaneously the statement is made that there will be daily and nightly displays of all the new weapons of war as well as recent developments in the arts of peace. The pom-pom will be on view, wireless telegraphy will be shown in practical use off the shore to passing vessels, magnificent displays of illuminating effects will be made, recently announced developments in electricity will be shown, demonstrations will be made in the cultivation of the sugar beet, modern methods of rescuing at sea will be illustrated, manœuvres with latter-day artillery will take place, in fact the military will be very much in evidence in all its branches, while the handy-man and the marines will also be used largely in the off-shore operations and the brilliant nightly spectacle the Bombardment of the Taku Forts by International forces. An International Military Tattoo will be the feature of the opening night, when a large body of troops will be utilized. A strong exhiblt of French-Canadian cattle, as well as of Pan-American live stock, is to be made. In fact, in the live stock, dairy products and manufactures, Toronto Exhibition never promised so well as this year. Greatly reduced rates on the railways and steamboats have been arranged for, and no better time for visiting both Toronto and the Pan-American, or the former alone, could be desired than between August 26th and September 7th. When it is stated that this year Toronto will distribute upwards of $35,000 in premiums and spend $30,000 in special attractions, all of which can be seen from the grand stand for 25 cents, the magnitude of Canada's greatest exhibition will be appreciated.

The Use of the Incubator.

The use of incubators is spreading. They are now made of all sizes, beginners preferring the smaller sizes. As a 100 egg incubator will hatch as many chicks as eight or ten hens, and as the chicks can be kept in a small space together under one brooder, there is no more care required than in attending to a large number of broody hens. As all the chicks can be hatched at once, they consequently reach the market in one lot and are uniform in size. The best time to learn with an incubator is in the summer, when eggs are cheap, as the cost of running the brooder is also then low. It is not difficult to operate an incubator, but there is something to learn; hence the incubator and brooder should be operated as a trial before attempting to hatch for the market.

Another evidence of Southern prosperity comes from the report of the establishment of a fine poultry farm near Manassas, Virginia, and very near the famous battlefield. It consists of 206 acres, purchased by Robert G. Bailey of Montana. When thoroughly equipped it will be the most extensive poultry establishment in the South and will be known as the Silver Bow Poultry Farm. A feature will be the breeding of fine prize-winning fowls. Pekin ducks also will be a prominent feature.—Cincinnati Packer.

Sight Of a Rare Black Swan Causes Consternation on the Potomac.

Ex-Representative John E. Reyburn of Pennsylvania has just lost a very valuable Black African swan, worth $50, and Mr. Schmid, the bird man on Twelfth Street, who sold it to him only a few days ago, assisted by a corps of assistants, is searching for the handsome fowl along the flats from the Eastern Branch to Little Falls.

The swan escaped late Friday night from the carp pond back of the Monument, where it was being kept, together with eight others, also owned by Mr. Schmid. Only once since then has the big bird been sighted. A party of local fishermen, angling in the upper Potomac near the Chain Bridge, on Sunday witnessed the unusual spectacle of a huge black bird enjoying itself in the river and diving for grasses near the Virginia bank. Fishing was immediately suspended for the time being and everybody endeavored to capture the bird, but without success. The swan escaped into the woods above Georgetown and since then no sight of it has been obtained.

The news that a swan was feeding in the vicinity of Washington caused intense excitement among local gunners when the news became known in the city yesterday and amateur and professional hunters prepared to capture the prize. When it was learned that the bird was a tame one there was great disappointment felt. Mr. Schmid is afraid that Virginia farmer boys may shoot the bird and he is making active endeavors to regain possession of it.

The bird is a female of more than the average beauty. It is thought that she has absented herself in order to make a nest and lay her eggs after the custom of swans at this time in the year. If this is true it will probably be some time before she is recovered, although Mr. Schmid believes that he will ultimately capture her.

Some time ago Mr. Reyburn contracted with Mr. Schmid for two Black African swans. He intended taking them in a few days to his summer home in Florida, where he owns an island, already stocked with many valuable birds. Last year he purchased several white swans, of a commoner variety, from the local bird fancier, but the natives near his Southern residence thought the breed was poor and shot them. This season he determined to obtain a much handsomer pair of fowls.

Mr. Schmid obtained them especially for the ex Representative from the National Zoological Gardens at Brussels, Belgium. The birds arrived a short time ago. They are two of the finest African swans in captivity, and were imported direct from the west coast Mr. Reyburn paid $100 for the pair, a male and a female.

When they arrived in Washington a short time ago Mr. Schmid made arrangements with the Fish Commission whereby he was able to keep them on the carp ponds, known as the Babcock Lakes, back of the White Lot, until Mr. Reyburn should be ready to receive them. Arrangements have not been completed at his Florida home, and the birds were accordingly kept longer than was at first intended. The wings of the two birds were partially clipped, and it was thought that they could not regain their freedom. Mr. Schmid was very much surprised when he learned that the female bird had disappeared on Friday night.

Saturday morning the search was begun. The flats south of the city were gone over carefully, but no trace of the bird could be discovered. The supposition is that the bird crossed the small lakes to the Basin, near the Bathing Beach, and that she escaped in that direction into the main channel of the river. Mr. Schmid hopes to recover her if the bird is not shot by some careless sportsman.

The male swan did not leave when his mate escaped. It is possible, according to Mr. Schmid, that he may call the bird back within a few days. Seven white swans, worth from $50 to $60 each, have been confined at the carp ponds for several months past, where they have attracted considerable attention. So far this is the first time that one of the birds has attempted to escape.

THE LOST SWAN LOCATED.

The big Black African swan, which ex-Representative Reyburn of Pennsylvania purchased, but has not yet received, owing to its escape from the carp ponds back of the Monument on last Saturday night, has at last been located on the flats near the Bathing Beach, and Mr. Schmid, the bird man, who sold the fowl to Mr. Reyburn, will draw the net around her to-day.

The proud bird from Africa, which enjoyed freedom for so short a time, is a victim of love, and but for the fact that she could not remain away from her mate, she would now, doubtless, be many miles away in the cold, pleasant climate of Canada, where birds fly when the thermometer goes up. Monday night the swan returned to the neighborhood of the lakes in the Monument Grounds, and called repeatedly for her consort. The male bird, however, would not listen to the call, or, if he listened and heard it, he evidently did not think enough of his wife to seek her and accompany her to the north. Yesterday morning he was still swimming contentedly about his pond, apparently satisfied and happy. Mr. Schmid thinks that they are not happily mated. If this is not so, the bird man says, the male swan has shown the white feather decidedly, in spite of his coal black plumage. A gallant bird, he said, would have joined his partner, whatever the consequences.

Early yesterday morning the men employed at the Babcock Lakes, used for breeding purposes by the Fish Commission, heard the peculiar call of a swan somewhere in the vicinity and made a search of the surrounding flats, but without obtaining a glimpse of the rare bird. The bird was whistling for her mate, and just before daylight she came up quite close to the lake in which her consort was asleep, with his head under his wing, and made desperate efforts in the swan language to induce him to fly with her. The watchmen in the Monument Grounds would have been glad to capture the bird, for Mr Schmid has offered $5 to the person who catches the truant. Besides, swan hunting is a pastime not often indulged in by the majority of persons, and the watchmen would have traversed half the swamp surrounding the city just for the sport.

The bird also paid a visit to the very centre of Washington early Monday night and roosted comfortably, undisturbed, in one of the public parks. She was seen in Iowa Circle about 8 o'clock in the evening and several attempts were made to capture her after she was sighted. The discovery of the handsome fowl caused considerable confusion in that part of the city.

Policeman Wright, on his way to Alexandria yesterday morning, was one of those who saw the swan in Iowa Circle. He read in the Times of the escape of the fine bird and when he arrived at Alexandria he informed the Police Department by telephone. Mr. Schmid was immediately acquainted with the fact and a force of men were sent scouring the city. Mr. Green, who is in charge of the carp ponds, also sent word that the swan had been heard near the lakes early in the morning, and the entire force of bird men and watchmen began to search the flats.

A party of men took boats at the Bathing Beach and crossed over to the flats west of the basin. The bird was heard, but she kept out of the way and was not seen. Mr. Schmid, who accompanied the party, then observed a black spot in the water near the neck of the big basin and declared that it was his swan. Great care was observed as the rowers approached the place, and not a sound was made. The black spot grew larger and larger and the men panted with excitement, feeling sure that the moment of capture was near at hand. They had heavy nets in which to snare the bird and as they rowed close to the object in the water they threw it at the black spot and hauled eagerly away.

As they pulled the net toward the boat the occupants were alarmed by the shouts of distress which rose from the water, followed by the shining head of a darky who had been bathing surreptitiously in the tidal basin. The colored man was tangled in the net and frightened almost out of his senses. For a moment it looked as though the man would be drowned. He thought the police were after him and Mr. Schmid had his hands full making explanations. Last night Mr. Schmid's employes, assisted by the watchmen at the lakes, located the swan in the marsh across the basin from the Bathing Beach and preparations were made for her capture at daylight.—Washington Times of July 9th issue.

Practical Hints.

The reason why fowls strive for the highest place on the roost is because they possess an instinct which teaches them that the higher they get the safer they are. So it is a fact that when the perches are of an uneven height the strongest fowls occupy the highest places. Probably the air is as pure three feet from the floor as higher. Fowls, when crowded in a tight apartment, by their respiration give off considerable carbonic acid gas. This, being heavier than common atmosphere, sinks to the floor and may have a deleterious effect on fowls roosting very low. Deleterious fumes are also evolved from decaying animal and vegetable matter. Perches should be at least two inches wide and rest firmly in a slot or mortise. Fowls will cling to one edge of a wide perch, and the width will give opportunity to rest the weight on the shanks. A very narrow perch makes it necessary to bear the weight on the breastbone, mainly in one spot, and thus it becomes bent to one side. This deformity is caused in many instances by roosting on the chine of a barrel or on the small limbs of trees. Old fowls have their bones hardened so that they will stand the pressure without bending, but all should have perches.

Oyster shells not only furnish carbonate of lime, but assist in grinding the food in the gizzard. No matter how sharp or hard any substance may be that is swallowed by the fowl, the gizzard completely demolishes it and grinds it into an impalpable powder, from whence it is passed into the intestines, where the digestive organs extract all that can be appropriated for the nourishment of the body and eggs. In the winter it must be borne in mind that animal heat is to be kept up as the first importance to egg production, and any deficiency of food will quickly be made manifest in that respect, but less food will be required during the warm season. Tonics are sometimes helpful, and a little copperas occasionally in the drinking water is very invigorating.

It is possible for the farmer to use his farm for the management of poultry and to allow the flocks ample room for foraging. If one cow cannot be kept on an acre why should such an area be expected to support 500 hens, as has been attempted? If a farmer should keep 500 hens on 10 acres and clear a dollar from each hen (including eggs and chicks), he would probably have a larger profit than from any other source, as but few farmers clear $50 an acre. The sales would be weekly (or even daily), and the farmer would not be compelled to sell his products in a lump and on a market that is oversupplied, as frequently happens when grain and other crops are harvested but once a year.

The incubator is quite convenient now, as it can be set at any time and with as many eggs as the operator wishes to hatch. He does not need to put them in at once, as he does with his hens, but can start it with a goodly number and put in another hatch later on. They will hatch out together, and there will be no danger of the chicks being picked to death by the hens when good artificial brooders are used, and in these the chicks will grow up fully as strong and healthy as they would if they had their natural mother.

It is useless to attempt to raise young chicks on cornmeal dough, as such a food is not sufficient. Very young chicks should be fed three times a day, and millet seed should be scattered so as to induce them to exercise in seeking the seeds. An excellent food for young chicks is bread made of the following substances: Sifted ground oats, one pound; cornmeal, one pound; bran, one-fourth pound; middlings, one-fourth pound; ground meat, one pound; ground clover, one pound; salt, two ounces; bread soda, one ounce. The bread should be crumbled, given dry and on clean boards, allowing no food to remain, as it will become sour if uneaten.

Farmers should never ship eggs until they have first endeavored to get better prices for them nearer home. If they would retail their eggs and seek customers a large sum would be added to the receipts from poultry. Fresh eggs are always salable, for every family must at times have them. It frequently happens when eggs are scarce, that one farmer must buy them from another, and in every village and town will be found those who prefer to buy from the farmer than from the dealer.

The poultry house should be looked after, and the roosting poles, as well as the interior, should be whitewashed. Remove the filth from the floors and sprinkle with lime. Clean the nest boxes and sprinkle sulphur in them to drive off vermin. The house should be made comfortable and large enough to accommodate all the poultry on the farm. Neglect in this matter and allowing your fowls to roost in tree tops in cold weather does not pay.—Mirror and Farmer.

Children and Poultry.

There is no better way of educating the younger members of the family to habits of economy than to give each a flock of fowls, but in so doing they should be instructed to keep strict accounts and be made to attend to all the details of management. Should the poultry or eggs be used in the family the young people should be paid for such and everything should be done in a business manner. In some families no spending money is allowed children unless they earn it, which is done with a view to teach them to value it, and by giving them a flock of fowls they do not only endeavor to manage the flock to the best advantage, but acquire knowledge of poultry keeping which may in the future enable them to realize annual incomes therefrom.—Western Poultry Journal.

The Buff Leghorn as a Farmer's Fowl.

Now there are many varieties of chickens and many fanciers of different varieties; but the fancier wants a utility bird as well as a beautiful one, and when he looks for both these desirable qualities, he can not pass the Buff Leghorn

by. It has often (and correctly) been said, the Buff Leghorn is an egg machine, and the Buff Leghorn has no superiors. They are hardy, mature rapidly and commence laying with ordinary care at from five to six months old; the mature hens lay as large eggs as the Rocks, Cochins and other fowls much larger than they are. The eggs are a beautiful chalky white, and any breeder can tell them at a glance from the brown eggs of most other breeds and there is no other egg that will attract the attention as quickly as a basketful of clean, large, white eggs. Now most farmers are more for eggs in large quantities than for chickens to market during the winter. There is no risk in eggs; they are always in demand, and when the price is low, your eggs, if farmers. cost, figuratively speaking, nothing; and when high, with anything like reasonable housing, the Leghorns will pay each day more for the feed and time devoted to them than any other breed, and more, it will take less room for housing the Leghorns. The Buffs are of course non-sitters, so called, but as every practical poultryman knows, there is no such breed as strictly non sitting, as all will sit some, but the Buffs do not sit till late in the season and many specimens never do; but when one does want to sit, there are no better sitters or mothers, and if the one that cares for them is gentle and patient, little biddie will be likewise. We set them each year. Some people think the Buff Leghorn good for nothing but eggs; but this is a mistake. They are very profitable as a market fowl, and right here will tell you how we handle all not sold for breeders. If you can't keep a few lazy old hens of some of the larger breeds to sit, this you can easily do, if you only keep Leghorn males, for you need not set any eggs but the pure bred Leghorns. As I said before, you can always tell their eggs to a certainty. Set as early as possible, use an incubator if you like, which is best if you can handle with success. Hatch all you can handle (don't try to raise too many chickens on one farm, for if you do you'll strike a rock, no doubt; many an amateur has sunk his bark on this same rock and sunk never to rise again. The size of the flock depends on your ability and facilities for managing it. But to our subject. By fall all your early pullets will have commenced laying, and later ones will commence during the winter, even if some breeder does claim if you don't get them started in the fall they will not commence till spring. Now don't sell many if any of your pullets, if you have room to house them comfortably. Keep them till the latter part of spring or early summer, but market them, or all you do not wish to keep over for the second year's breeders, just before the broilers from the country flood the market, and you'll get top price for them; for hens of the Buff Leghorn size (color will help them out, too) are what the market demands at this season. Now for the male birds. Have every cockerel caponized that you do not need for breeders; don't let any one make you believe they are too small, for true enough the market asks for eight and ten pound birds, and one of the main reasons of this is, the capon must be fat, and we assure you, the nice, fat Buff Leghorn capon will command the best price paid, and more. All the early birds will be matured and ready for market at the opening, along in December. We have noticed articles in many journals on capons that said it didn't pay to caponize Leghorns. We think the writers of said articles never owned a flock of Leghorn capons or shipped any, as we send all ours to Chicago, and each year receive the top price; ours is experience, not theory.

Now as to the fancy, all Buff varieties are very popular, and in all probability they will rank with any other color, even now, and are growing in popularity. Many breeders have never seen a good buff specimen, nor does one expect to see them if he doesn't see the stock of the best breeders, in other words, go where they are to be seen, simply to our large poultry shows, or to some good breeders' yards, and when once seen, there is no color more pleasing to the eye of the lover of the beautiful.

The Buff Leghorn is a typical bird, if there is one, neat, active, and a beautiful color, a nice, even buff, not red or mottled white. But we will say to the amateur, read the Standard of Perfection and see its description, but then don't form a mental picture from this book and ask some of us poor cranks to send you such a bird for $1. Remember, we have not yet reached the ideal, and those birds that fall far short of the Standard's ideal, will cost you a long price. We have owned some fine specimens, as their show record has proven, but have had correspondents ask us for birds that we have only dreamed of as far as perfection is concerned, and think they ought to have such for about $2. But then, every fancier has had a like experience; but will say to the amateur, don't tell a customer your birds are better than they are; this might make sale for you, but the trouble and chagrin it will cause will never pay. Tell the truth and if the customer strikes a fellow that can tell a better story, and leaves you for him, you will gain in the end. We'd rather put our birds on the public market than have a kicking customer.

Now, my fellow fanciers, why don't you join our Club, as your influence will aid us in pushing this meritorious fowl to the front? Many do not understand the benefit of a Club. It is simply this: If there had been no fanciers' clubs formed, there would have been no poultry shows and consequently there would have been little attention paid to fancy poultry, and as the fancy goes hand in hand with utility, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary, the poultry industry would not be the mighty source of income it is to our people to day; and more, if we do not advertise and get an article before the public, who outside of the few will know the value of what we have. It takes a little money to do this, and a few deeply interested parties to push our business and keep us awake, and there is nothing like a wide awake hustler at the head of affairs, and some one to extol the merits of the stock we have to sell; and now if a breed of poultry or stock of any kind is not handled by a breeder of sound judgment and good business qualifications, no matter how superior the stock, it is never heard from. The formation of clubs has been the life of many varieties of live stock as every farmer and fancier knows. The prosperity of all will be helped by a club. So think about this. B. F. HISLOP.

Six Hundred Mile Homing Pigeon Race.

The final long distance race as arranged by the Metropolitan Concourse Race Association, engaging 150 birds belonging to fanciers residing in Newark and Elizabeth, N. J., and New York, Brooklyn and Staten Island was flown from Greenville, S. C., on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, July 16th, 17th and 18th. The race was scheduled to take place on Saturday, July 6th, but owing to continued stormy weather the birds were held 10 days in the baskets. This long confinement told severely on the condition of the birds. They were liberated at 5 a. m., on Tuesday, July 16th, by C E. Watson, who telegraphed that the wind was west at time of start. At home it was blowing nicely from south to southwest during the three days, but the birds were retarded by the frequent showers which occurred. No birds arrived home day of toss as was to be expected, but the early arrivals next a m., showed the gameness of Homing pigeons.

The Progress of Pigeon Racing.

The following is an extract from an article in the London Field: The progress of pigeon racing in England is one of the most remarkable events connected with what may be called sporting competition. In 1871 I organized the first great competitive flight, which was from the Crystal Palace to Brussels, and also to various parts of England. For the race to Brussels only 72 birds were flown, and about an equal number were liberated to fly to various parts of our own country. It is not wholly uninteresting to note that this race was put off for several days, owing to the fact that H. R. H. the Prince of Wales was coming to the Palace on the day originally fixed for the flight, and it was thought by the managers that His Royal Highness should not be inconvenienced by a pigeon race, even though one of an international character being held on the same day. This is in amusing contrast to the fact that both His Majesty the King and the heir to the throne have since become successful fliers of racing pigeons, having had birds returned in races from as great a distance as the Shetland Isles. After this race I organized others, two taking place from the Alexandra Palace to Brussels in 1875 and 1876. By this time much attention had been directed to these races, and hundreds of birds were entered, nearly 500 being liberated at once for Brussels in 1876.

The utility of these birds in warfare and as messengers from the sea was insisted on as long ago as 1871, when I wrote in the Times on the subject. Since then pigeon flying has progressed in England to an enormous extent. There is little need for our government to establish pigeon lofts, for there is scarcely a village and certainly not a town in England which does not include flying fanciers, who would willingly place their birds at the disposal of the Government in case of their being required for active service, as was done by the inhabitants of Paris during the siege of that city by the Germans.

The extent to which these birds are kept may be inferred from the fact that the Yorkshire Federation of Pigeon Clubs sent no fewer than 12,500 birds to Rugby on May 24th. These birds required a special train of 16 vans to take them to their destination.

That so large a number of birds as 12,500 should be liberated by one federation proves the hold that pigeon racing has upon the public. If it had been stated at the time that I organized the first flight that a special railway train of sixteen vans would be required to convey a number of pigeons to fly for prizes, I think the speaker would have been laughed at for his prophecy. These accounts in themselves are sufficiently extraordinary but I have lying before me a letter from no less an authority than Dr. Spencer Baird, the secretary of the Smithsonian Institute, who forwarded me a very long article from the Newark Advertiser, U. S., which is a remarkable example of the powers of invention of American journalists. This paper devoted three columns to flights. Amongst other statements was one to the account of some extraordinary pigeon that a bird flew to its home 400 miles in an hour, came to its nest with its feathers worn down to the quills by the flight, and with only a stump of a tail; and that another flew home 2000 miles and cut a hole like a bullet in a pane of glass when stopping. This was equalled by a bet being offered that a bird would fly 500 miles in two hours, and that another had flown in a continuous flight over 3000 miles. This is a specimen of the accounts published by American journalists respecting pigeon flying. It is needless to say they were not received in this country, although I am free to confess that statements respecting poultry that are equally incredible frequently appear in the English Press, the last absurdity being a detailed account of a hybrid between a goose and a peafowl.

White Belgian Hares.

Editor American Fancier: I was quite interested in the discussion on White Belgians between Mr. Babcock and our English friend. I was inclined to coincide with our English cousin, only I would not claim that it was impossible for our pure Belgians to throw albinos, as all fowls, birds and animals will at rare intervals throw white specimens. The wild deer is not dissimilar in color to the hare and breed albinos, two specimens having been found in the Adirondack mountains in the past two years. I have known of the Belgian hare being in this country fourteen years ago. I have bred them eight years in a great many different strains, but I never have bred a white one, and I never heard of one till within the last year or two. A friend of mine a few weeks since told me he had one in a litter but they all died, but from his own description of the doe I should say she was not purely bred. The only mystery to me is, if one albino appears in about twenty years, how is it so many have sprung up in the past year? I am afraid we will have to quote from George P. Bennan, and the quagga has been there or in other words they have been crossed. Personally I see no particular use for white Belgians, as any school boy can breed a white rabbit, but I am perfectly willing for others to ride their hobbies on any colored hares they like, but I do not like to see made up crosses sold as pure bred. I have been told by two parties they could breed white Belgians very easily by crossing on a common white rabbit. Now that is not breeding pure stock and it is deceiving the public for the almighty dollar, and the man that would do it is no true fancier, as a true fancier is striving to reach as near perfection as it is possible regardless of dollars and cents.

Tanning the Pelt of the Belgian Hare.

Having taken the pelt off, submerge it in cold water, allowing it to remain fifteen minutes to one hour, when it should be placed upon a table, flesh side up, and having thrown off all the surplus water remaining on the surface, rub fleshy side of pelt with a solution of ¼ to ½ teaspoonful arsenic to about ¾ teacupful hot water. Dissolve and use solution as hot as can bear hand in it, rubbing pelt about five minutes; fold pelt once, fleshy side in, place it in box secure from cats, dogs, etc. In twenty-four hours repeat rubbing with same solution, using, hot, the portion remaining from the first application and adding to it, if necessary; fold pelt once, fleshy side in, and put away for another day.

Third application, on third day, should consist of strong hot brine, made from the best Turk's Island salt (or any other good English brand of dairy salt), and then occupy five or six minutes rubbing. No injury will result from the use of the strongest brine made from salt. Immediately after rubbing, sprinkle the hide well with the dry salt of the same grade used in making solution; fold and place away for another day. On this day, before applying the above solution and rubbing, if a hide be very fat it may be placed in benzine from ¾ to 1½ hours, according to weight and degree of fatness; then this pelt will be much easier worked and the setting of the fur insured.

Fourth day: Tack the hide on a board or barn-side in the shade. This day, or within two days following, is the best time to remove fat and fleshy part from the pelt; this may be done with a knife and is called the fleshing process. In the application of the solution and dry salt, special care should be taken to cover and rub into any portion of the hide that may appear extra with these lumps of flesh, membraneous coating or chunks of fatty substance is where the fur is most likely to come out; consequently, as soon as the fourth or sixth day the fleshing should be performed and another application of the solution of the brine should be made, and the pelt may then remain for an indefinite time, or it may be within a day or two placed in the tanning liquor.

TO MAKE TANNING LIQUOR.

To 1½ gallons clear water (filtered water is best), add 25 ounces or about 1½ pounds Turk's Island salt (or any good grade of English salt), bring to a boil, strain through a linen cloth to remove all particles of debris, turn all the liquor out into a vessel slowly and carefully, to avoid disturbing any sediment that may be in the bottom. Rain water, stained from the roofs of buildings or from any other causes will both deaden the rich colors of the fur, and stain the leather side of the pelt to a dingy or dirty shade. Ladies invariably spleen against garments made of dirty furs, and they may be brought out as white as the driven snow if care and cleanliness are exercised in the various processes the hides are put through. To this stained brine, when nearly cold, add 1½ ounces (by measure) of sulphuric acid. (Note: Sulphuric acid is a rank poison, and will consume any vegetable product and many kinds of metal, hence care should be exercised that no containers excepting glass, and rubber corks be used.)

Always place the hides in a cold or cool tanning solution. Do not use a greater proportion of acid, but the strongest brine may be used without injury to the hides. Use vitrified crocks or jars or tanks to contain tanning liquor. On top of hides use a follower of clean granite or same material as the jar, but of a size to avoid binding against the inner sides of the jar, and weight the pelts down under the solution; pelts to remain in the tanning liquor from eight days to three months. When taken out of the liquor, wring out the pelts with a clothes wringer, and soak them about one hour in a weak brine of about half a cup of salt to one gallon of clear water.

The working of the hides should be begun by stretching them in every direction with the hands. Never work a hide when it is not moist or soft; if it is dry or crisp it is quite certain to tear when stretched. While stretching, fold and rub the hide in the hands, similar to hand-washing clothes, and when a hide has been worked out to a pretty good size, work it over the break. And this break may be made either of a buck-saw blade or of hard wood beveled to an edge and fastened solid. In this process of breaking up, a pumice stone is almost an indispensable instrument. Sand paper will do, but for general use and working a pelt down to what may be termed a good condition the pumice stone produces the best results; but to work a pelt down to the very finest degree of softness and pliability a medium grade of sand paper, fastened on a block about 3x6 inches is necessary.

In the event that hides have been allowed to remain a long time after the four days' treatment before being fleshed it is necessary that they be softened by soaking in weak brine. Sometimes two or three hours is necessary to bring them to a degree of softness to justify attempting to flesh, and during the fleshing process it may be necessary to moisten the hides with a little weak brine. A smooth surface base of wood without any cracks in it, is preferable to metal and insures safety against tearing the hides while working them down with pumice, sand paper, etc. A block of clean hard-wood timber, 4x6x8 inches, and about 3 feet long, rounded on corners, using the 8-inch face, may be used for this purpose. By clutching the hide with one hand and pulling the corners together over the end of the block nearest the body, and with the other hand crowding with the pumice stone or sand paper from the body, you will be enabled to put on much pressure and make rapid progress in working down the hide. Some very tough and very thick hides will bear the use of a coarse file for a few strokes in some places. (A bastard file is the proper thing.) A bail shaped clamp, made of heavy wire or quarter-round iron, may be adjusted to the end of the block nearest the body, to hold the hide instead of holding it with the hand, thus allowing the freedom of both hands in working down the pelt.

Having completed the wringing-down process, place the pelt upon a smooth, level-surfaced table, and with a cork-faced, sled-runner shaped furrier's hand break, crimp and fold the fleshy side of the pelt with one hand, giving heavy pressure with the break in the other hand, making several strokes in each direction across the pelt, which will make the hide as limber as cloth.

If perchance in any of the processes the hide should become torn, sew it up at once, or before the hide becomes dry. Take a seam sufficiently deep to insure safety against the stitches tearing out when stretching the seam to remove appearance of the seam on the fur side. Allow no fur to show through the flesh side of the pelt when stretched. Much care is necessary in the use of the knife in fleshing old pelts—that is, pelts that have been allowed to remain dry and become glazed. As nice a job cannot be done when the pelts are allowed to become old in the salt before fleshing as when they are fleshed within from four to six days after coming from the animal, principally because there are likely to be some hard spots thickly covered with fat, flesh or membraneous substance, which prevents the solution of arsenic or salt from penetrating to the epidermis, which is necessary in order to make the fur hold fast; therefore, when pelts are fleshed in the early days of treatment, this condition is completely overcome, insuring perfect work.—W. C. Moore in the Golden Egg.

die by being lousy than from any other cause. You can talk about improper care and food, lack of green food and grit, but, when looking for the root of the trouble look for lice, and when you find them look into the merits of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies. Rev. H. H. Purrington, Mt. Vernon, Maine, writes: "We all use Death to Lice and find it most satisfactory." The Norton Poultry Yards, Dallas, Texas, writes: "We have been using your Death to Lice for the past four years and it has given entire satisfaction."

have head lice than most poultry keepers realize. Some think that these little pests are pin feathers on the top of a chicks' head and do not take the trouble to examine them closely until the broods begin to die off. One Massachusetts fancier says that it cost him hundreds of dollars to learn this. Death to Lice Ointment is made especially for the extermination of these little blood suckers, without injury to the little chicks. 100 doses 10c postpaid.

MORE CHICKENS

than should go into two coops are often crowded into one. The lice will then crowd into these small quarters and assist to make the nights long, hot and miserable. The little mites or spider lice crawl out of the cracks and crevices and extract more blood from the chicks than they can make during the day. Charles L. Evans, Wood River, Neb., writes: "I have given your 'special' a thorough trial. I had a hen-house that was polluted with mites. I mixed one (four) ounce box of special to one gallon of whitewash and gave it a thorough whitewashing. I now defy anyone to find a louse about my hen house."

MORE CHICKENS

properly cared for mean more money. Proper care means a liberal use of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies as well as suitable food and housing. No poultry keeper ever failed because he put too much money into Death to Lice. Many do fail because they do not keep their flocks free from vermin The most successful money-making poulterers are those who use the most Lamberts. We have remedies for all kinds of lice on anything and everything. We put it up in all sizes of packages to suit all kinds of people. We have all kinds of good testimonials as to its efficacy.

PRICE LIST.

STUPENDOUS FORTUNES MADE IN OIL!

Rockefeller with his hundreds of millions easily heads the list, but there are scores of others unheard of whose fortunes range up in the millions.

California is rapidly coming to the front in Oil Production. The past two years has seen a remarkable advance in value of Oil Company Shares, being all the way from a few dollars to $100, $200 and $300 a share, and in the Home Oil Co., to over $4,000 a Share.

Hundreds of people have made more money the past year in California Oil Fields than they ever dreamed they would be worth.—[FINANCIAL RECORD, Oct. 3, 1900

One company paid last year $175,000 in dividends on a capital stock of $100,000, and land which could have been bought a year ago for $5 an acre, has by virtue of oil advanced to $30,000 an acre. —[LOS ANGELES HERALD.

More fortunes will be made in California oil investments within the next two years than the most enthusiastic would have dared to predict. The time to buy oil stocks is before the price shoots up to hundreds and perhaps thousands of dollars a share.

—[FINANCIAL TIMES.

A GILTEDGED INVESTMENT.

MT. SHASTA OIL AND DEVELOPMENT CO., OF SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

A Legitimate Company with men of honor and ability at its head. -;- Work rushed night and day. Development work is being pushed as fast as men and money can do so. -:- Oil may be struck at any moment. The quality found in this district is of a very high grade, commanding the highest market prices.

GREAT FORTUNES HAVE BEEN MADE!

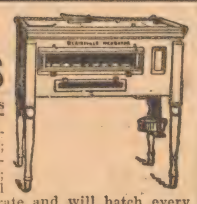
Hundreds, yes, thousands, have been made wealthy during the past year through wise investments in oil. We offer to the eastern public the same or a similar opportunity. Grasp it while you can. To-morrow may be too late.

10,000 Shares For Sale at 65cts. Per Share.

To give you an illustration of the rapid rise in value of oil stocks we quote the following, only a few of the vast number, and their advances were all made within one year, some less than four months.

The following will suffice to illustrate what "quick action" means on an investment and where the profits begin from the day oil is struck:

El Dorado Oil Company, first cost	$ 50	now	$ 5 00
Kern River Oil Company, first cost	1 00	now	16 00
Independent Oil Company, first cost	1 00	now	3 00
Blue Goose Oil Company, first cost	25 00	now	41 00
New York Oil Company, first cost	10 00	now	200 00
Home Oil Company, first cost	100 00	now	5000 00



Do not delay. The price may advance any day.

The officers and directors are men of sterling integrity, well known and respected in the community where they reside. They have organized and put their own money into this company, with a firm purpose to make it a success and one of the big dividend payers of the state. Gentlemen, while we advise caution, the early bird gets the worm. Stock you buy to-day for $100.00 may cost you $1,000 to-morrow, or even $10,000. Order at once.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15. one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

Gold A VIRGIN GOLD MINE Gold

Is that owned by the

GOLDEN TREE

MINING AND MILLING CO.

IN THE HEART OF THE KITCHIKAN DISTRICT OF SOUTH EASTERN ALASKA, WHICH IS THE RICHEST GOLD BEARING PART OF THE WORLD.

It is located on the estuary known as "Thorn Arm" 600 miles north of Seattle and south of Dyea and Skagway, and has great natural advantages, being surrounded by the warm waters of the Japanese current. Like the Gulf Stream the water never freezes, modifying the temperature so that the mine can be worked the year round. The property is at tidewater and the ore can be carried to the smelters at light expense.

The entire property of the Golden Tree Mining and Milling Company is underlaid with the

which ledge ore now ASSAYS OVER $100 PER TON and gives promise of two to three times that amount.

The Golden Tree Mines are in the same contact and a short distance from the famous Sea Level Mine, recently capitalized for a large sum, and all its stock was sold in New York City. The Sea Level Mine is putting out enormous quantities of rich ore.

The Golden Tree Mines are far richer and show better prospects than the Sea Level ever did until it was developed.

Immediately surrounding the Golden Tree Mines are a number of other exceedingly profitable mines, such as the Gold Standard, Sea Breeze, Gold Coin, Gold Mountain, Sea Level, Gold Hill, Bragdon, Sutton and others.

The same rich vein of free gold, sulphides and tellurides runs under ALL this section of contiguous property. THIS IS NO EXAGGERATION OR DREAM, for results have been realized from all of these mines by actual work and development.

The stock of these companies, which sold a short time ago for a few cents a share, is now steadily bought by the knowing ones at par or more.

The Golden Tree Mining and Milling Company, capitalized for $2,000,000, at $25 per share, all fully paid up and non-assessable, and the directors have decided to offer to the public a limited amount of the Treasury Stock—8,000 shares at 25 cents on the dollar, viz., $6.25 per share net cash.

The Treasury stock is sold for the express purpose of putting in additional stamping and other machinery for the further development of the mines.

As soon as the money procured from this sale of stock is invested in crushers and other machinery, which it will be inside of six months, every share of this stock will be worth par.

It will easily pay an annual dividend of more than 10 per cent on its par value, or 40 per cent on the investment.

Fidelty in the management of the property is assured by the fact that Hon. John R. Rogers, Governor of the State of Washington, is the president of the company, and Hon. John H. Reevis, a Justice of the Supreme Court, is its vice-president.

This is a rare chance to make a safe and profitable investment which is inviting to the large and small investor alike. Orders of any size are acceptable.

In order that investors may be fully protected, the officers of the company have employed the firm of Gardenhire & Vandivert of New York City, as counsel. This is itself a guarantee for this well-known firm would not permit itself to even constructively indorse a proposition which it had not investigated and upon whose officials it could not rely.

Orders will receive prompt attention. Address

From the Editor's Perch.

Mr. H. V. Crawford, secretary of the New York Poultry and Pigeon Association, informs us that there will be no change in the entry fees and premiums for pigeons. We trust this will act as a soothing lotion on Bro. Twombly. The latter in a recent issue of the Pigeon News got unduly warm for the season of the year over what was going to happen in the pigeon alley at New York.

This reminds us of the fact that warm collars in July and August will even succumb in the stiff and frigid atmosphere of the Hub when the temerity of such a little borough as New York in holding a show on the same dates as Boston is considered.

Personally we consider the clashing of dates of these two great shows a serious matter, but do not believe anything is gained by starting an attack on either. To a genuine fancier and exhibitor it looks like peanut politics.

All we have to say regarding the New York and Boston shows is: Both will be patronized as in past years and both will be successful, we hope.

A correspondent of the Fanciers' Gazette remarks:

"In every show-room the writer has visited during an experience of some years, though floor managers have been duly appointed to guard the fowls from mishap, exhibitors, breeders and visitors have been permitted to take specimens from the coop and examine them ad libitum. Your correspondent would have to plead guilty if charged with this offense against good management, though now prepared with all others who may give the matter a moment's thought to denounce such action as reprehensible! In our leading shows, where competition is especially spirited, there is probably no greater cause of dissatisfaction among exhibitors than this permission granted every one to 'get down into the feathers' of any specimen before the judge has performed his work. In a crowded hall, where even the majority of exhibitors are strangers to those in charge, it is difficult to tell the owners of coops from those who are their strongest rivals, and opportunity is given any unscrupulous rival to mar the chances of any specimen he may fear."

In a well regulated show birds are not allowed to be handled by anyone outside of the superintendent, owner and exhibitor, but with our system of judging it seems rather difficult to avoid such handling by outsiders, except at shows like New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and a few others, where birds are judged by comparison the first day of the show. The English system of judging birds the day before the opening of a show to the public and excluding all exhibitors, allowing only the judges and stewards access to the coops, is the only correct and satisfactory method.

The above-mentioned writer illustrates the evil of this indiscriminate handling as follows:

"In order to show the evils of the practice a little personal experience may be of benefit. One season the writer entered at one of our large shows a pen of Brown Leghorns, which were far above the average for quality, the cockerel being a very superior specimen of his class and remarkably clear of all defects of plumage. When they were shipped there was not a feather turned, frayed, broken or missing. With such a pen of well-bred stock some degree of success seemed reasonably sure. The second day of the exhibition the show-room was hunted up, where it was found the Leghorns had been judged the evening before. The faultless cockerel had been cut two points for broken feather in the wing and relegated to second place. As the cockerel thus treated was pronounced the finest in the hall by all who saw him, this seemed particularly unfortunate. At the show of this society a year later, about the same breeders competing, the finest Brown Leghorn male belonged to another exhibitor, but also lost the first honors because a feather stump was discovered in the wing. The owner, with the writer, examined the fowl's plumage thoroughly the day before it was judged, and every feather in it was found to be correct down to the skin."

The above simply illustrates the fallacy of the score card and incidentally reflects on the value of allowing color disqualification. To cut two points for a broken feather in a wing when the total number of points allotted to wings is eight—four for color and four for shape—is suicidal to the specimen and calculated to injure the breed and disgust the genuine fancier and breeder.

We are in receipt of a long and interesting letter from Dr. S. T. Lea, of Cokesbury, S. C., in which he explains his position regarding the meeting of the American Poultry Association in the South. The doctor based his remarks on a statement made by a member of the executive committee that the next meeting would be held at Philadelphia, so he took it for granted that the South had been ignored. Subsequent inquiries revealed the fact that no vote had been taken and that his informant, to use a slang phrase, "talked through his hat."

We regret that Dr. Lea has been misinformed, and certainly no blame can be attached to him for expressing his views on results that existed simply in the imagination of a gentleman who is and has been pulling hard and faithfully for Philadelphia.

Personally we deem it a very unwise and harmful move to circulate statements as to the settled location of the next meeting of the A. P. A. before a chance has been afforded to the members to select the place from the list furnished by the secretary.

We think the South is entitled to an annual meeting of the A. P. A. as much as the East, West or North, and it seems not out of place to call attention to the fact that the Southern Exposition to be held at Charleston next winter will be one of the best opportunities for northern and southern fanciers to get thoroughly acquainted. Further, we think a meeting there in 1902 will do much to cement the friendship that should exist among fanciers and wipe out all sectional feelings.

Dr. Lea in his letter writes:

"As regards time, space and influence, the vote of the A. P. A., if it represents America (especially as it has met out of America—Canada), should be to meet in any section. In the South only one meeting, and that the only one during the life of the A. P. A., was held at Charleston ten years ago. The South does not have shows often, so we feel that we can invite the A. P. A., and the Exposition Co. will certainly give the society a grand time."

Every member who attended the last meeting at Charleston will heartily agree with the last sentence in the doctor's letter. Southern hospitality is proverbial and southern fanciers are gentlemen in and out of the show-room.

The holding of a meeting in the South next winter will not seriously inconvenience any other section where such a meeting is desired, and there are other years to come when the opportunities for meeting in the South will not be as timely as in the coming year.

Mr. George F. Weston, one of the managers of the famous Vanderbilt Park at Biltmore, N. C., has been appointed Superintendent of Live Stock at the Southern Exposition and a better selection could not have been made, practical knowledge and executive ability being Mr. Weston's strong points. The poultry show will be held the last week in January, 1902.

Scurfy Legs In Pheasants.

At the last meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society, the consulting zoologist presented a report in which he stated that "a case of widespread disease amongst fowls and pheasants was found to be due to scabies of the legs caused by the mite Sarcoptes mutans. It is highly contagious, and diseased birds should be at once isolated, and the beams, perches, etc., they have used, disinfected with dilute carbolic acid or boiling water."

The prevalence of the disease is well known, and also its contagious character, but the isolation of the infected wild pheasants, though exceedingly desirable, is, it is needless to say, utterly impracticable. I demur to the treatment suggested by the writer, viz., the steeping of the legs for a few minutes in tepid water and the removal of the scales with a brush, which in most cases, it would be impracticable to accomplish, as the swellings form large lumps on the tarsi of the birds, and if they are pulled off there is a great deal of suffering and loss of blood. The treatment by quack medicine and Balsam of Peru is certainly not the most desirable. Some years since I recommended the destruction of these parasites by the use of strong carbolic dog soap, but common paraffin oil is even more efficacious, as, by its diffusive character, it penetrates below the scales, kills the mites and destroys their eggs. In corroboration of this, I may quote a letter sent to me by the late Mr. Horne, an extensive pheasant breeder. He says that "after trying various remedies he used paraffin on a young bird that was a perfect cripple, with knots on its joints like nuts." Not a single word is said about the much more important matter of the prevention of the spread of the disease, which, among pheasants is entirely due to careless keepers employing infected farm yard hens as sitters and mothers, especially those with feathered legs. Before the introduction of the Cochins this disease was practically unknown in our farmyards. Amongst poultry it should be treated by the application of paraffin to the legs, cleansing the houses, and disinfecting the perches with carbolic acid or paraffin. The great prevalence of disease is mainly due to the introduction of fancy fowls with feathered legs into our ordinary farmyards.—W. B. Tegetmeier in London Field.

Is Early Maturity Desirable?

This is a question that has not received as intelligent consideration as its importance demands. Early maturity results mainly from what might be termed two radically different causes—natural condition and forced feeding methods. Before poultry shows were so prominent there was little desire to have extra early chickens, and in consequence there was not so much heard about wonderful early maturity. Poultry raisers were satisfied to have their chicks hatch out at a season when there was no necessity to take extra precautions to keep them from freezing to death. To get chickens of good size for the early fall poultry shows and fairs the incubators and artificial brooders became necessary factors, and the henhouse arrangements to combat the cold weather, to undergo changes. With all these factors and changes, the show specimens are often forced to such a degree that their practical qualities are impaired. To such an extent is this true that there are poultrymen who would rather select for their yards chickens hatched in May or April, that had not been crammed with food to hasten growth, than the show specimens of early hatching. Where a flock of medium size has favorable conditions, such as plenty of shade and pasture, with access to pure running water, and are given a good, varied diet and strict cleanliness is observed, they will grow as nature intended they should. Robustness and frame will develop together properly, forming a well-balanced result. Fowls that are thus developed in the proper season, starting with spring—the time when nature provides all favorable conditions and food to help the natural growth—will in the end prove to be valuable utility specimens. Forcing to secure size or promote egg-laying will most assuredly have its penalties. Many of the heavyweight fowls at the poultry shows cannot be depended upon as breeders. In order to reach Standard weight usefulness is too often sacrificed. A heavyweight fowl is an indolent one, and such hens will lay very few eggs and few of the eggs will be fertile. There should be more effort to strike the happy medium between "extra earlies" and "forced laters." Common sense suggests that the springtime hatches are the dependable ones. The expert poultryman, who devotes his whole time to the business, can battle with the elements and get out broods in the winter, and with his snug, artificially heated houses, his brooders and incubators will in a degree be successful, but hardly profitably so from a strictly commercial point of view. The man who undertakes to raise very early chickens without all the necessary accessories will simply wish he hadn't. Close observers long ago discovered that there are many instances in which broods that were hatched six weeks later than the early ones are late in the season fully as large as the early hatched ones, and that the pullets will commence to lay nearly as early and continue just as long as the early hatched ones. When it is remembered how much more care and food have been given the early ones, it is a question, then, what is to be gained by having extra early chickens.

It is an admitted fact that chickens hatched as late as June are invariably better plumaged than the late winter or very early spring ones. This fact is very noticeable among the regular poultry fanciers' flock. A well-known Plymouth Rock breeder said to the writer last fall: "If I could only get such plumage on my very early hatched Rocks as I always do on the very late ones I'd have many a crackerjack." Where supplying eggs to customers is the main thing it will, of course, be desirable to have pullets of early and late hatching, so as to have as near as possible layers all the time, and hens and pullets of different ages provide the only way to accomplish this.

It is undoubtedly a fact that too much importance is attached to early hatched chicks and too little to late hatched ones. Take a little more care of the late chicks and avoid crowding them at any time, night or day.

Where the late hatched chicks have good shady runs and are not crowded and "bossed" by a lot of "earlies" the growth they will make is astonishing. They have no "weather set backs" as the early broods do. If the late broods receive as much care as is bestowed on the early ones, more of them will be raised than of the latter.—G. O. Brown in the Baltimore Sun.

Rearing Goslings.

Goslings should be allowed to remain warm and quiet for at least twenty four hours after hatching, and for the first few days every precaution must be taken to prevent their being chilled. By the time they are a week old they need no artificial heat if the weather is at all moderate. They do not require much care. Until strong enough to have full liberty they should be confined to small movable pens, which can be moved to new grass each day. With each pen some sort of shelter must be provided to protect them from sun and storm. Their sleeping places must be kept clean. Other items of management requiring special mention will be found included in the methods of feeding given below:

NEWMAN'S METHOD.

The first two or three days keep them in a warm place and give them a little soaked bread and water. In nice weather turn them out in small inclosures which can be moved every day. After a week let them go. The first four or five weeks give nothing but stale bread occasionally; but always leave them at liberty to get all the grass or clover they want. Do not soak the bread, as they do not like it so well. After five weeks give a mash of two-thirds bran and one-third corn meal. To fatten—after six weeks feed one-half bran, one-half corn meal; do not feed it sloppy. Never allow goslings to go to the water until fully feathered, and then only let those go which are to be kept for breeders.

RUDD'S METHOD.

They can be fed at first on one-third Indian meal and two thirds shorts, wet cold and squeezed almost entirely dry. Sloppy food must be avoided. They should be fed as often as hungry, which will be at least every two hours—perhaps oftener. The important points at this stage are to keep them warm, dry, and supplied with food. As they grow older they need outdoor air and exercise. As spring advances and grass begins to grow, they can be put in movable pens on the grass. When three or four weeks old (depending on the weather, condition of the grass, etc.) they should, if possible, be given a wide range—turned out to pasture; but the enclosure, of whatever size, should be fenced gosling proof. They should be fed twice a day with three fourths shorts, one-fourth Indian meal, thoroughly wet, then squeezed or pressed dry—all they will immediately eat up clean. The drinking vessels should never be empty. If they are to be fattened they should be confined and fed less shorts and more meal, adding some beef scraps; gradually increasing the proportion of meal and beef scraps until shorts are discontinued, and the food is about ten per cent beef scraps and ninety per cent meal.

CUSHMAN'S METHOD.

Goslings are better off if they get nothing but tender grass and water the first day they are put out, or before they are forty-eight hours old. The next day they should be fed two or three times, but very lightly, with scalded cracked corn. This is probably as good food as can be given from then on, provided they have at all times an abundance of tender grass to eat, and the amount of cracked corn fed is such as will always leave them hungry for grass. An exclusive diet of grain or dough, without plenty of grass, or too great a quantity even with grass, will spoil them—cause them to lose the use of their legs and die. If grain is fed sparingly while they are young, grass being three-fourths of the food, few will be lost. To make the best growth, they should have succulent green food before them while they can see to eat. If shut in for a short time morning or evening, or on a stormy day, they should have a continual supply of freshly mown rye, oats, clover or corn fodder. Otherwise they will fret and lose much in weight. When the object is to raise show birds of great size and frame at maturity, it may be best to feed oat meal, gluten feed and bran liberally, as well as corn and grass or clover; but there will be less uniformity under this feeding, and more will be lost.—Farm-Poultry.

Debilitated Birds.

It is often the case at this season of the year that one finds thriving birds, especially cockerels, suddenly become debilitated. Frequently this is the result of intense heat, and under such circumstances to give the birds liberal stimulating food aggravates the evil. In hot weather shady places must be provided and green food ad libitum allowed. If there be not natural shade, as trees, there are other means of providing the necessary shelter from the sun. As vegetable food a supply of lettuce leaves hung in the run is excellent, and another good thing is to chop up some freshly cut dandelion leaves and mix them with the soft food. The strictest cleanliness should be observed during hot weather and all food should be perfectly fresh. Stale food, and particularly if acid fermentation have occurred, is a constant source of dysentery and diarrhœa, and scores of birds are lost annually through neglect in this matter. As soon as a bird is noticed to droop, change its food. A small quantity of raw meat, chopped small, may with advantage be given, and medicinally two drops of tincture of perchloride of iron morning and night.

And, writing of medicines, perhaps one of the most common in use is that known as Parrish's chemical food, or compound syrup of phosphates, a teaspoonful of which when correctly proportioned would contain one grain phos. of iron, two and a half grains phos. of lime, one-sixth grain phos. of potash, and one-eighth grain phos. of soda. The dose usually given is a teaspoonful once or twice a day; but, apparently, this stuff is harmful. Noticing in a recent post-mortem report something to this effect, I wrote to Mr. W. Vale on the subject, and he very kindly replied as follows: "About fourteen years back, when Mrs. Hill, of Tovil, lived at Cheltenham, there was considerable mortality amongst her Houdan chickens, and it was only after I had examined a number and had corresponded for some time with that lady that the cause was discovered through my happening to examine the bones of some of the dead birds. I found the vascular tissue in the bones acutely inflamed, and, supposing it was due to an excess of some constituent of bone in the diet of the chickens, I advised the discontinuance of 'Parrish's Food,' which Mrs. Hill was in the habit of using, and the mortality amongst the chickens ceased without any treatment. And since then I have found that Parrish's so-called food has in very many cases been the cause of ostitis. The folly of dosing any poultry with phosphate is made very evident when one is aware that grain and seeds contain an excessive quantity. As a matter of fact, when feeding poultry one should try to reduce the quantity of earthy salts for all but birds in full lay."

Another drug that has been recommended for debility is "china," the homœopathic preparation of quinine, being certain quinine properties held in alcoholic solution. Writing to me anent this drug, a fancier friend who understands such things said: "Hom. call the drug china because a tincture is made from the bark of the cinchona tree, and the al. call it Peruvian bark because it (the tree) grows in Peru. Its chief use is in cases of debility, but personally I question if any or much benefit is derived so long as the cause of the debility remains in operation. I know that triturations and solutions are made from the sulphate of the alkaloid quina, but really the Peruvian bark is what is generally used. Personally, when iron (which I need hardly tell you is a blood food, because it restores the blood to its normal condition), is required, I give my birds Blaud's pills. If these are properly prepared they contain the sulphate of iron along with carbonate of soda or potash, mixed with a little gum tragacanth. They are prepared with these ingredients in a dry condition, so that the salts retain their integrity until they become mixed with the fluids of the stomach, when the sulphate of iron becomes transformed into the carbonate and the carbonate of potash into the sulphate. Absorption (without which, of course, the drug does not benefit the bird) in these circumstances of the iron then takes place, and more readily even than if the carbonate of iron had been prepared in a laboratory. But it is always desirable in prescribing Blaud's pills to combine with them a small portion of aloes, which tends to keep the bowels in a state of action, and thus promotes the medicinal effects, besides counteracting the astringent effect of the iron."

A daily dose of four grains of citrate of iron is advised by some as a good tonic, and on this my friend writes in the same letter: "Of course, the citrate possesses the advantage of being soluble in water, but medicine given in the drinking water is a slovenly way of doctoring and mischievous in most cases—in iron certainly, on account of its astringent properties in particular, therefore the complications possible from overdosing. By the way, you might wonder how I used to administer Blaud's and aloes. Well, my birds were awfully fond of gooseberries, and I used to make a small hole in a small one, remove the contents, and place a Blaud's inside and half of a Carter's little liver pill, and drop the supposed gooseberry—the patient would have bolted it in a twinkling and be looking for more. As to quinine (or Peruvian bark), two grains every four hours is a safe dose, because if too long administered or too large doses are given it produces cinchonism. It may also act as an irritant to the stomach; this, however, is when chronic congestion of the mucous membrane exists." As to the administration of drugs which my friend mentions, I find the most economical method is to make a pill or two of biscuit dust and milk, cut them open, remove a small portion from the centre, drop the dose of the drug in, squeeze the halves together, and rub the pill in the palm of the hand. Dropped under the beak of the bird when hungry it will pick it up instantly and will so save catching and cramming, which processes do not tend to keep the patient normal.

When drugs will dissolve in water it is common to mix the dose in a teaspoonful, and either by means of a syringe or funnel put it into the crop. But this is laborious, because the operator has to hold the fowl securely between his knees, unless he has an assistant to hold it for him, open its mouth, and put the nozzle of the syringe or funnel into the bird's throat and hold it there firmly whilst the liquid is pumped or poured in. The bird is sure to become excited and this excitement is not beneficial. Then, again, putting medicine in the drinking water is really wasteful, although some will say it is handy with a large flock, but where many birds have to be dosed I have always measured out the quantity of water necessary to mix the soft food and dissolved the medicine in that, thereby being assured that the stuff is well distributed. Even roup and other powders can be given in this way, because should the whole ingredients not dissolve they will be spread over a larger area than is the case when the powder is merely sprinkled on the meal. Of course, there are the advertised tonics, and in pill or capsule form they are excellent; powders and pastes should, however, be dissolved as far as possible and used as I have mentioned. —Rufus in Poultry, England.

OFFER 200,000 SHARES TREASURY STOCK AT $3.00 PER SHARE.

THE CALIFORNIA KING GOLD MINE COMPANY owns 23 claims in Picacho Basin, four miles from the Colorado River, in California, and twenty miles by direct road from Yuma, Arizona. . . . . .

DEVELOPMENT work has been in progress for six years, and more than ten thousand feet of shafts, drifts levels and cuts have been completed and paid for.

Upwards of fifteen million tons of ore are now ready for the mill, all of which will be mined by open cuts at a nominal cost.

A CONTRACT has been entered into for the erection of a mill and cyanide plant capable of handling 1,000 tons of ore daily, which will be completed this year. The Directors guarantee that this plant will be placed in operation, regardless of the amount of treasury stock subscribed. The net profit after commencing work will exceed $60,000 a month, and probably reach $100,000 a month within a year. The ore in sight will supply such a plant for more than forty years, assuring an annual return of 20 per cent or more on the investment.

There is no promotion stock. No salaries to officers. Every dollar realized from the sale of stock, goes into the treasury to pay for the plant. Reports of J. Ralston Bell, London; William A. Farish, Denver; Emerson Gee, Denver; P.C. Du-Bois, Berkeley, Cal.; J. L. Shepherd, and others, all eminent mining engineers, strongly recommend this property.

This is an Opportunity to invest in a large Mining Property of known value, managed by experienced mining men in the Interest of stockholders

Application will be made for listing the stock on the Boston Stock Exchange. Prospectus and any information desired will be furnished on application. Subscriptions received by Development.

[Address delivered by HENRY HALES before the 1901 class in Poultry Culture at the Rhode Island Experiment Station.]

In my talk to the poultry class of this college last year I considered the origin and distribution of poultry and season for their finding favor with the early races of man in so great a part of the world. As I suppose most of you here present are not the same persons I addressed then, it will be well to go over a few of the same topics again.

Man in very remote ages kept animals in so-called domestication, which we know from their bones being found in caves and buried with human remains. There is no doubt that primitive man selected such animals or birds that would be most serviceable for his pleasure or profit and suitable to their mode of life and enjoyment. It must not be supposed that they selected fowls for their tameness alone, as there are other wild birds which when bred in domestication are even tamer than fowls.

We can see in our various domestic breeds of poultry that each specie has a tameness or natural habits of its own. For instance, the cock and hen have different tameness and habits to ducks, and ducks a separate nature from geese, and all unlike the Guinea fowl, turkey and peafowl. It will not take you long on a farm to notice these peculiarities of their differential natures and to find they cannot be changed by man in domestication. There is in each and every specie certain traits and dispositions that are indelible, and domestication has little or no control to modify after the first generation of confinement. Of course, there are individual exceptions as to degree, and there is much in the manner in which they are treated, but their capability of learning is limited to their natural capacity specifically.

Fowls (I am now speaking of the cock and hen) have a determined liking for certain roosting places. Ducks, if they live near a brook, will wander off sometimes, and at night, finding more music in the croaking of the frogs than in their owner's voice, will not return. I once had some Aylesbury ducks that would watch me coming to fetch them home off a brook when wandering far from the house. They would see me a long way off and hide under a little, low bridge where I could not see them. I could only poke them out with a long pole.

Ducks naturally lay at night, but if let out very early they get the habit, many of them, of holding their eggs to lay away, hiding them.

The nature of turkeys is peculiar to them. They care little for cold and less for inside any buildings when they can get food outside.

Guinea fowls are extremely cunning and will take great pains to hide their eggs.

The peacock's domestication is a very limited one. Although bred by man for thousands of years they, if restrained even in large enclosures, seldom, if ever, lay when they find they are restrained.

I have only to mention these commonplace facts to show the different tameness that exists in every specie of all animated nature which is inherited and unchangeable. To treat fowls successfully one must know their nature and use means accordingly. You may drive a flock of turkeys a long way on a road, but do not try to drive a flock of hens in the same way.

Of the origin of our domestic poultry there is no doubt. Careful investigation has settled that by the physical comparison to the Gallus bankiva, the voices, disposition, and, in fact, everything except size, and that is accounted for by the variability and plasticity of its nature.

We find a great difference in the nature of species in the vegetable as well as the animal kingdom. Apples, pears, hickories and some other trees, the seedlings seldom, if ever, bear fruit on two trees alike, while seedling trees of other species vary but slightly. The same is true in the animal kingdom. Geese, turkeys, ducks and Guinea fowls do not vary much, while the peafowl—one of the longest known domesticated birds—varies but slightly. In the Gallus bankiva we find—or rather was found for us a long time ago—a nature so plastic as to offer man a remarkable opening for his skill. Even in the wild state this specie is very sensitive to its environment, as they change in size and color in the different islands and parts of continents where natural. I have a letter from Theodore Sternberg, late secretary of the American Poultry Association, and now Governor of Iloilo, stating that there are several colors and sizes of Gallus bankiva strongly resembling the Game strains. And we find in other parts of the world fowls vary much, but their habits and voices are the same, which could not be were they not identical in species.

Nothing could show the sportive tendency more than a large lot of what were called barnyard fowls fifty years ago. There were all colors—yellow, buff, white, black and red—short legs, long legs, crests, muffs, whiskers, and few people thought of breeding any in line by selection. Our yards are now so impregnated with our recent breeds that this great variation of nature has in a great degree left us. Still there lies latent remote blood, or whatever we may call it, in the very highly bred varieties we take so much pride in. Think of these qualities lying dormant in all our fowls awaiting an opportunity to assert themselves, either by man leaving them to mix up again or by selecting to improve, as we may call it, some fancies of our own.

I will call your attention to a few facts concerning my experience in that line. I have seen on Japanese pictures fowls of many shades of color. We have only black and white in our Standard of Perfection. I procured only one cockerel that had a straw colored hackle and back. I also procured some all black, white and black tailed, and in two years they produced a great variety of colors. Some like the old birds, some light yellow, deep buff, grey and golden duckwing colors. I intend if I live long enough to breed in line buffs, goldens, silver greys and perhaps other colors. These little Japs are very likely the same fowls that Darwin mentions in his "Animals and Plants Under Domestication," Vol. I., page 298: "Creepers (short legged), one of the earliest mentioned of fowls from ancient Chinese encyclopædias, variously estimated at 1400 to 800 years B. C.," and said to be small, so that the first intimation of fowls on record agrees somewhat to the Japanese Bantams. The probability is they were not all as small as some of our Bantams are now bred.

I notice the nearer these Japs approach the Game colors the longer they are on their legs. This brings me to say a little word on coloring.

The laws governing the colors of birds and poultry seem to have rules that are worth the attention of breeders. The nearer the color and shape approach the original type, the wilder the birds. Compare the Brown Leghorns to the Brahmas and Cochins. Buff or yellow runs into red and brown; slate color to drab; black to white; white to black. Whoever breeds black birds knows the difficulty of breeding out white or gray touches. Those who breed black breasted fowls, such as Silver Grey Dorkings, Black Red or Duckwing Games, or Dark Brahmas, have the nightmare of this intruding white. You all know the difficulty of keeping a clean, pure. even buff or red tint over all the plumage. It is this law of reversion that puts in an obstacle.

I mention this to caution you against introducing any new blood from any strain that has the deep colors you want to avoid. In breeding for a time with the purest colored bird you will get clear colors of the shade you want. Compare in prepotency of form Pekin Bantams and Buff Cochins.

I will now say a little of a practical nature.

I will begin by saying that the poultry business is of such a nature that a man must have a love for nature, or at least a love for his fowls. Your lessons here in this college are of a grand character. How many have failed for the want of just the knowledge you get here, but for all that it must be supplemented with true love and sympathy to keep up that indefatigable labor that brings success.

Next I will tell you why there are so many failures in the poultry business. So many go into the business with little or no preparation; some go into it because they have heard that it is a light, genteel business, such as invalids or the weak—I will not say lazy person—can make a good and easy living. Such persons throw up the business after a short time with very peculiar ideas about the poor chickens.

Of mating, rearing and feeding you have already had plenty of the best talent to direct you, so I will touch only a few points that experience suggests to me.

In the first place, I think nothing is of more importance than the study of health in your flocks. In the poultry business I think there is very much that is confusing to the novice. Some recommend the only safe remedy—a sharp axe. Others have remedies for short breath, crooked toes, weak legs, and every ill that is known to poultrydom. As an expert florist can go through his greenhouses and note the condition of his stock, so must the expert poultryman understand his charges.

I am not treating on the diseases of poultry, so will not mention the remedies you require. They are carefully noted and recommended in works devoted to it, but I will say that no plant can be properly conducted without a supply of proper disinfectants and well tested remedies; for instance, a bird gets his comb frozen, another tears his comb and requires the stoppage of blood, some get fighting and require care to prevent the wounds taking on a malignant nature; most of all in the treatment of colds. This is the rock where many amateur poultrymen are wrecked. If an ordinary stimulating appliance does not entirely succeed, watch for developments. When some are found (which are generally very few) that get worse, remove them and treat them with proper care, and the flock will go on as usual. I know a beginner in the business who lost 100 out of 200 in his flock, simply because he did not know how to treat the first symptom. I do not pretend to say that you can save all the patients by this treatment, for some will seem determined to die, but it is certain you can save a large proportion, and they may be returned to the yards as well as ever.

One more confused confution in the business is what the writers call lice, as big as horses; with a little more modesty they might as well have said elephants. The number of remedies, and expensive ones, pile up to the horror of the uninitiated. The mites, or acaria, that infest nests and houses are very easily kept down by very inexpensive means and little labor. All the rest are bred on and remain inhabitants of the fowl's body, some living entirely on feathers, the others on the blood of the victim, and are just as easily controlled by simple treatment.

Here let me say that these conditions must be attended to. They are not appalling in the magnitude of labor required; it is simply comprehending the situation and acting quickly. Avoid complications.

The poultry business requires as much vigilance, careful management and business methods as most pursuits.

Buff Color.

Buff color is a pretty difficult thing to define in words. We can get samples of the color on paper and on silk, but the real buff of the feathers is indescribable when seen in the highest state of perfection that nature and condition have brought about.

Buff is neither a red nor a yellow. We say this because there seems to still be a divergence of opinion on this point. We have seen good fanciers lean toward the reddish color and think it very nice, and again have seen equally good fanciers go wild over a pale yellow color. The Standard calls for a golden buff, and to a person who is not color blind that description should fill the bill. Years ago in England and in this country we had orange buff, lemon buff and cinnamon buff, and that is why there is such a mixture in some Cochin strains today. The golden buff comes very close to being the orange buff, losing a trifle of the reddish sheen and gaining that golden lustre so desirable in a buff fowl. To produce such, standard color must prevail in both male and females where mated. Extreme matings will produce shafty, ticked and mealy specimens. The first person to adhere to the theory of mating standard colored birds was George G. McCormick, of London, Canada. This was years ago, and we do not remember handling a more even lot of Buff Cochins in color than those shown by him some eight or nine years ago. The wonderful success in breeding for color attained by Buff Wyandotte breeders in the past three years is due to the fact that extreme matings were discarded and even colored buff specimens used. The same can be said of Buff Plymouth Rocks and Buff Leghorns and to a certain extent of Buff Cochins. But in Buff Cochin Bantams we still find too many red males and shafted and mealy colored females. A true buff male will show the same sheen and color in hackle, saddle and wing bow, the main tail feathers, wings and breast being also of the same color, the sickles corresponding closely in sheen and color to the hackle and saddle. In the female all sections should be alike, an even buff color with no shafting, the only exception being, perhaps, in the hackle, when in high conditioned specimens there will be found that grand golden lustre so much admired. Under-color, although a trifle lighter buff, should never be overlooked. White under-color, and especially white quills, are serious drawbacks in breeding birds. Black or blue cast in under color is not near as serious a defect as many breeders imagine. One of the best breeding birds we ever saw had considerable slate in the under-color. Suffice it to say that with standard matings and a thorough pedigree system in the selection little fear need be entertained of making a failure in producing fine specimens.—J. H. Drevenstedt in Buff Wyandotte Club Catalogue.

Fancy Pheasants and Their Allies.

ARGUS AND PEACOCK PHEASANTS.—THE ARGUS.

The Argus Pheasant is a bird of large size, though inferior to the Peacock, which it somewhat resembles in its rather light and lengthy build. The head is bare, except for a longitudinal ridge of small, fur-like feathers on the crown; and the tail is folded vertically like a common fowl's. The secondary quills are very long, reaching beyond the flights even in the hen, and in the cock being of enormous size, about three inches broad and projecting over a foot beyond the end of the body. The cock's two centre tail-feathers are also remarkable, being over four feet long, very broad, and curiously twisted at the end. He is much larger altogether than the hen, but except for his huge wings and tail, and special color-ornamentation to be presently described, does not differ much in general appearance, both sexes having the plumage brown thickly speckled with buff, the bare head blue, the bill white, and the legs red, without spurs.

The extraordinary and quite unique beauty of the cock lies in his wings, and cannot be seen while they are closed, for along each of the great secondary quills, on the outer web close to the shaft, runs a series of most beautiful eyes or ocelli; not brilliant like those on the Peacock's train, but most perfectly shaded with ochre, sienna, white and edged with black, so as to resemble balls lying in sockets, when the feather is in a vertical position. Large as these feathers are, they are very thin and delicate, so that, seen from behind, they look like stained glass, and the ornaments are plainly visible; yet the webs are firm and well knit, and they wear well. The flights, although not remarkable in size or texture, are scarcely less beautiful; their shafts are dark blue, and parallel therewith on the inner web runs a patch of rich cinnamon minutely dotted with white, the feather being likewise adorned with rows of black and cinnamon spots on its pale drab ground.

This is by no means a full description of the plumage of this wonderful bird, whose exquisite tinting and shading will repay any amount of study, and need it to be appreciated properly. The beauty of the Argus is, indeed, chiefly in its shading; it has no brilliant color at all, and the form of the male, with the long straight line formed by his closed wings, is not altogether graceful. But he reserves everything for his display, which is indeed a wonderful sight. Before showing off, he gets much excited; I have seen his head literally swell, and heard him stamp loudly on the ground in a manner unlike any other bird. Then he raises and skakes his wings, and then throws them forward and spreads them till the front edges meet before his head, and they form a great vertical fan, most beautifully painted. Meanwhile the tail is raised to complete the picture. The hen seems supremely indifferent to all this fuss, but the cock is very much in earnest about it, and anxious that she should have a good front view; while it is stated that such is his anxiety to read her somewhat inexpressive countenance, that he will often thrust his head—which is, of course, right behind one wing—between two of his wing-feathers, to look, thus keeping a place frayed there!

When moulting, the male appears, from a specimen I have long observed at the Calcutta Zoo, to cast off the great ornamental secondaries almost at once, since they grow again evenly. This specimen keeps himself in fine condition, and the feathers when cast are quite worth keeping.

Young cocks resemble the hen in this species, but may be distinguished by showing traces of the "eyes" on the wings.

This bird is found wild from South Tenasserim through the Malay Peninsula and Siam, to Sumatra. It inhabits evergreen forests, and is shy and solitary. There appears to be no regular breeding season, and the hens have no fixed abode. The cocks, however, have very domesticated habits, each bird clearing for himself a space of a few yards square in the jungle, in which he lives, merely going out for his meals of fallen fruit, insects, etc., and roosting at night on a tree close by. Here he displays himself, presumably, to such hen birds as may visit him; not wandering about to fight with other males, although he will answer their calls. His note is a fine loud whoop of two notes, like "how-how," and is audible at a great distance; the female's call is trisyllabic, and repeated faster and faster till the notes run together.

The Argus is not a common bird in captivity, and I should hardly have included it were it not so well known and so interesting a species. But it appears to thrive well when it can be procured, and has repeatedly bred in the London Zoo. It requires good protection from the weather, however, not being so hardy as most pheasants. In disposition it is not shy or difficult to tame; a captured bird has been known to return to its aviary after escaping. No doubt its sedentary habits in the wild state account for this, and also for the fact that, as the bird at Calcutta shows, it can keep in good condition in a space only a few yards square. This specimen is very vicious and cannot be trusted even with his hen constantly; but I never saw him interfere with other birds when kept with them. The hen Argus is said to lay seven or eight eggs in the wild state; eggs laid by tame birds are said to be of a rich coffee-color. The young are able to fly and roost on a perch very quickly.

One other species of Argus, closely allied to the common one, is found in Borneo. Another is suspected to exist, from a portion of a flight-feather, formerly possessed by Mr. E. Bartlett, who showed it to me when he was Curator of the Maidstone Museum. This feather was presented by Mr. Bartlett to the British Museum; it differs from that of an ordinary cock Argus in having the white-spotted cinnamon patch on both sides of the shaft. Hence it has been called Argus bipunctatus, the two-spotted Argus. No other specimen has turned up, and it is just possible that this one belonged to a bird which was merely a "sport"; but the fact that the shaft of this feather differs in being narrower and thinner than that of the ordinary species makes this explanation doubtful. It must be remembered, however, that birds may throw varieties in color and structural points at the same time, though this is rare; thus, a light-brown variety of the Moorhen sometimes occurs, which has hairy-looking plumage and soft lax webs to the quills, so that it cannot fly.

THE GREY PEACOCK-PHEASANT.

The Peacock-Pheasants are rather small, lightly built birds, the male of the present species, which is the largest, being hardly as big as the hen of the common Pheasant. They have erect crests and long broad rounded tails; and the males have two or three spurs on each leg, whence their scientific name, Polylectron, meaning "many-spurred." The grey Peacock-Pheasant is drab, finely speckled with cream color, this producing a grey effect at a distance; the wings, back and tail are ornamental with beautiful metallic "eyes" of green shot with violet, so exquisitely shaded that they seem to stand out from the surface of the feather. This applies to the male only; the hen, which is smaller and has a shorter tail and crest, though very similar in general coloring, has the "eyes" replaced by simple blackish spots only slightly glossed. Young cocks resemble her, but show more approach to the eye-spots of the old birds of their sex. In all, the throat is white. The bill and legs are dark, and a bare space round the eye pale, sickly yellow, a hue which is not enhanced by the white eyes of the cock; the hen's eyes are dark grey.

This bird is found in a wild state from the Assam hills through Burma to Siam. It frequents thick jungle and is little known, being more often heard than seen. The cock has a most irritating barking cackle, which he is far too fond of repeating at times. These birds have bred in the London Zoo; in captivity they pair, and the hen lays only two eggs, of a buff color. The first young hatched were reared by a Bantam hen, and it was noticed that they kept constantly behind her, so that they got a full share of kicks when she was scratching the ground. Their reason for this apparently foolish behavior was not understood till a brood was reared by the Peacock-Pheasant herself, who was observed to spread her tail as a shelter for the chicks, which followed her beneath it, only running forward when she found some food for them, and soon retreating under this curious natural umbrella.

Another interesting point in the habits of this pretty Pheasant is the display of the cock. Being anxious to show his mate that he has all his eyes about him, so to speak, he displays himself sideways, lifting one wing and lowering the other, and spreading his tail, which he tilts up on a slant till it is level with the slanted wings, thus giving as good a view as possible.

This is the commonest and best known of the Peacock-Pheasants, as might be expected from its Indian habitat, but the London Zoo has possessed two other species, both surpassing the present in beauty, handsome though it is. These are: Germain's Peacock-Pheasant, which has a darker head and red skin round the eye, while in the hen the eye spots are much better developed than in that of the common bird; and the Malayan Peacock-Pheasant, which has the ground-color of the plumage buff thickly speckled with black, a red face, and the crest of the male tipped with purplish green. This species, as its name implies, comes from the Malayan Peninsula; Germain's from Cochin China.

The Peacock-Pheasants certainly deserve to be better known. Their beauty, in the combination of bright spots with a soberly colored ground, is quite peculiar to them, and as they are the smallest of the Pheasants they are peculiarly suitable for aviaries. The other species are even more brilliant than those I have mentioned, and I hope that before long we shall have opportunities of seeing these alive, but they seem very scarce at present, even as museum specimens.

TRAGOPANS AND MONDULS.

The Tragopans, often miscalled Argus Pheasants by sportsmen in India, are not really related to the true Argus, but form a very distinct and easily recognizable group. They are as big as a good-sized fowl, and of rather heavy make, with drooping tails, shaped somewhat like a common hen's; the legs and feet are rather long and slender, and the bill very small. The males are larger than the females, and have a pair of short spurs, they also have the face and throat bare or only thinly feathered, and possess a pair of fleshly horns on the head and an expansible dewlap on the throat. Both these appendages are much better developed at the breeding season than at other times, and they are not ordinarily noticeable, the horns, in particular, commonly lying hid in the full crest possessed by the male, which usually lies flat, and does not alter the outline of the head-feathering.

When he displays himself to the hen, however, the horns rise erect, and the dewlap expands longitudinally and transversely into a great bib or apron, decorated with the most brilliant colors, but the display does not last long.

The Tragopan cock, however, has two strings to his bow, and also displays his plumage alone by a method very common in this family. The plumage is raised on one side of the body and lowered on the other, in a heroic attempt to show the hen both sides at once! The said plumage is well worth displaying, as it is a wonderful combination of bright hues with delicate markings and shading, very difficult to describe fully. Fortunately, however, the general characteristics thereof are easily conveyed in a few words. The upper plumage is intricately speckled with black and brown, more or less intermixed with red and varied with pale spots of different colors; there is always more or less black on the head and red on the neck, and the lower plumage and flanks vary according to the species; so also does the expanded dewlap, but the horns seem always to be blue, the legs red or flesh color and the bill black.

The hens are much alike, their plumage being closely grizzled light and dark, a style of plumage which, with their characteristic shape, distinguishes them easily from the hens of other Pheasants. They resemble each other, however, so closely that their differences are best appreciated by comparison.

Young males exhibit an admixture of male and female plumage. Tragopans are forest-haunting birds, keeping to temperate regions in the Indian and Chinese hills; they feed much on green food, and are not at all hard to tame. All the species have been kept in captivity but only two are at all well known, these fortunately being the most striking of all.—F. Finn in the Feathered World, England.

Lofty Thoughts of the Editor

Many fanciers are now separating their birds, as the old ones are dropping into moult, and the young bred after the coming month will cause more sickness in the fall and winter than all other reasons combined. Why? Because the young bred in September are, as a rule, raw in mould during the chilly nights of the fall and easily catch cold while in that condition, begin sniffling and get one eye cold and filled up with a matter characteristic of this disease, which causes the scattering about of these germs, and many birds that otherwise would have been safely past such become contaminated. Ofttimes old birds as well are attacked, and after it is all over and the smoke has cleared away mighty few late hatched ones will be left and a good number of other birds will be found to have gone along with them. So much for late breeding under ordinary conditions. If a man has a few choice birds that are slow breeders and they have not been bred over three nests, as a rule they may be depended upon to rear another nest of fairly vigorous young, and especially so if they are kept in such a loft that there is plenty of room, say, four pair of birds in a loft 8x8, with an outer flight. But with the average pigeon fancier four pair of pigeons are not allowed the extravagance of so much room.

The shows are coming on and already lists have been received from Cambridge, N. Y., show, where a real live pigeon man is in charge; also from the great Toronto show, which bids fair to have a larger entry of exhibits from this side than they have yet had, those who have exhibited there in the past having nothing but words of praise for the manner in which our friends across the line handle exhibits entrusted to their care. Another item that interests pigeon fanciers is the fact that what premiums they offer in their premium list, are to be given if there are enough birds in the class to win them, viz: if there are two birds in the class worthy of the money they will get 1st and 2d prize and the cash with it. The writer has shown them and can speak from actual experience, and does recommend to those who exhibit, the sending of a few to Toronto, feeling sure he will be helping the show and the fanciers as well. This brings up to mind the fact that pigeon men would like to see the Philadelphia show a success, and if the management would engage some live pigeon man to take charge of this department and run it on the same lines as the pigeon department of the Boston show, they would never regret it. With a man of executive ability such as Mr. Twombly of the Pan-American and the Boston shows, she would have the confidence of all pigeon men, a large entry assured and an annual meeting at Philadelphia that would place her where she belongs, and that is right up to the front. There are many pigeons kept in and about that city and many more within a day's ride, that if properly nursed would soon develop into a wonderful show at Philadelphia, that all who were connected with the same would be proud of. Is it too late to try such a plan as a pigeon superintendent? If the writer remembers correctly there was an effort made to get right into the band wagon at the first show, and some five or six judges were hired, but when the entries were counted up one man could do the job. Now if less judges were hired and more of a liberal policy pursued in regard to prize money, I believe the Philadelphia show would have had an annual gathering equal to our largest shows, but pigeon men are peculiarly built, while not out for all there is in sight they want to see enough to insure, if successful, a small margin on the right side of the ledger, and I believe that with the advice of one whom the show managers and exhibitors mutually had confidence in, such can be brought about. Try it for a year.

Putting the Rabbit on a Sound Basis.

Editor American Fancier: The breeding of rabbits or of any other domestic creature cannot long persist simply as a "fad." It must be placed upon a sound basis if it is to continue. To secure this basis certain steps can be taken legitimately and ought to be taken promptly.

1st. From the commercial side, a market for rabbit meat should be created. And the first step to be taken in creating this market is in dispelling the popular prejudice which exists against the rabbit as an article of food. No matter how foolish and ignorant this prejudice is, we cannot afford to shut our eyes to its existence. It is held not only by persons who are really ignorant upon most matters, but by persons who are intelligent upon most subjects and ignorant and unreasoning only upon this topic. I said to a very intelligent lady that she ought to try a Belgian Hare for dinner. "Eat a rabbit!" she exclaimed; "I would as soon think of eating a cat." I am not prepared to deny edible qualities to the useful and beautiful cat, but I confess that I could not knowingly eat one, and perhaps I am in respect to cats as prejudiced as this lady was to rabbits. But I know rabbits are good for food, because I have eaten them. If this prejudice can be dispelled the demand for rabbits as food would certainly increase. But how to dispel this prejudice is not an easy problem. Something can be done by example. If rabbit breeders will dress the rabbit for their own tables, will set it before guests without apology, and will thus induce them to try it, something will be accomplished. Do this and a market will spring up.

Let those who are competent to pass upon the edible qualities of various meats certify to the value of the flesh of rabbits, and this will also help to dispel the prejudice which exists. Don't forget the family physician in this matter. Physicians, as a rule, are comparatively free from prejudice, and if they order for their patients and recommend to the families under their care rabbit meat as an article of diet, they will be powerful aids in bringing people to a same view of the question. Something in this line has been done already, but much more needs to be done. And there never was a better time for its doing than now, when all kinds of meat are so high that the careful housewife is troubled to know how to make her weekly allowance provide for the needs of the family.

Do not relax efforts to set forth the edible qualities of the rabbit in the public press, in poultry and agricultural papers, and above all in the daily newspaper. Let circulars bristle with these facts and let the recipes of the papers and cook books tell how to properly prepare this animal for the table. Familiarity with recipes for cooking rabbits will have a tendency to dispel the prejudice against them as articles of diet.

2d. From the fancier's side, persistent exhibiting and advertising are necessary. Nothing helps out the popularity of an animal or fowl like evidences of popularity. "Nothing succeeds like success" is an old and a true adage. Breeders of rabbits should make special efforts to exhibit full classes at all exhibitions, large or small. And by a full class is not meant a beggarly showing of tens, but of hundreds, and, may we not say it hopefully, of thousands. At almost any show it ought to be possible to get together at least one hundred Belgian Hares, not to mention other varieties of rabbits, and at the larger shows like New York, Boston, Chicago and Providence, one thousand specimens ought not to be a vain hope. The thought that others will win ought not to prevent anyone from exhibiting, for in the first place it is not certain that others will win, and in the second place the loser will be a winner because the popularity given to the breed will redound to his personal advantage. All breeders, winners and losers alike, are profited by the evidences of popularity which big classes furnish. Nothing, in my opinion, has done more to handicap the Hamburg fowl in the race for popularity than the scanty exhibitions of this breed at poultry shows. Nothing so adds to the popularity of a fowl as to exhibit it in large numbers and keep doing so. If, for example, Belgian Hare breeders will show at the next Providence show five hundred specimens, and will continue to do this for a series of years, they will make the Belgian Hare popular in that vicinity, will secure many additional sales of stock, and will induce the management to offer liberal prizes and valuable specials, so that exhibiting will prove highly remunerative to the winners, as well as keep up the prestige of the animal. And New York and Boston ought to have each year not less than one thousand Belgians on exhibition. And this is what ought to be done all over the country. I have always admired the "nerve" shown by O. K. Sharp in the days when he was breeding the Indian Game so largely. Win or lose, and he did his share of winning, his classes alone at New York always made the variety seem popular. He didn't put in a few of his best birds simply to win first and second prizes, but long rows of birds which he knew could not win, but which he also knew it would pay him to exhibit. In a smaller way I used to do the same thing at Providence, and twenty to forty birds were shown by me. Of course, that wasn't the most profitable method, looking to the prizes alone, but it paid, for sales of eggs and stock pay better than prizes.

And advertising is not to be ignored. "Keeping everlastingly at it" does serve to popularize a fowl or an animal. Why, there are people who will take up a publication and will estimate the popularity of a breed solely from the number of advertisers and the space allotted to the breed. Reasonable or unreasonable, it is nevertheless a fact. And by combining the two, advertising and exhibiting, the work of popularizing a fowl or an animal is wonderfully facilitated.

To put rabbit breeding upon a solid basis we ought to eradicate every unreasoning prejudice and to make use of every reasonable aid, the methods of employing some of which I have crudely indicated.

THE COSMOPOLITAN.

The Cosmopolitan for August is, as usual, rich in fiction, remarkable both for its vivid interest and its great variety. Irving Bacheller writes a refreshing story of the Canadian big timber region, and Hering's drawings catch the spirit of the scene perfectly. A. T. Quiller-Couch's ("Q.") pathetic little tale cannot fail to enlist our sympathies with the French exile who broke his parole for love. Richard Le Gallienne tells the most charming and least known of the quaint "Old French Romances"—the love of honest Squire Robin for the Fair Jehane. "The Temple of Fate," the late Grant Allen's clever satire on modern society, is certain not only to entertain the reader, but also to set him thinking. Frances Willing Wharton writes a pretty story of fashionable Newport society — a subject with which she is thoroughly at home; while Phœbe Lyde and Egerton Castle handle strong subjects in a masterly manner.

ASTHMA CURE FREE!

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in all Cases.

SENT ABSOLUTELY FREE ON RECEIPT OF POSTAL.

WRITE YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS PLAINLY.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.
NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 130th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

die by being lousy than from any other cause. You can talk about improper care and food, lack of green food and grit, but, when looking for the root of the trouble look for lice, and when you find them look into the merits of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies. Rev. H. H. Purrington, Mt. Vernon, Maine, writes: "We all use Death to Lice and find it most satisfactory." The Norton Poultry Yards, Dallas, Texas, writes: "We have been using your Death to Lice for the past four years and it has given entire satisfaction."

have head lice than most poultry keepers realize. Some think that these little pests are pin feathers on the top of a chicks' head and do not take the trouble to examine them closely until the broods begin to die off. One Massachusetts fancier says that it cost him hundreds of dollars to learn this. Death to Lice Ointment is made especially for the extermination of these little blood suckers, without injury to the little chicks. 100 doses 10c postpaid.

MORE CHICKENS

than should go into two coops are often crowded into one. The lice will then crowd into these small quarters and assist to make the nights long, hot and miserable. The little mites or spider lice crawl out of the cracks and crevices and extract more blood from the chicks than they can make during the day. Charles L. Evans, Wood River, Neb., writes: "I have given your 'special' a thorough trial. I had a hen-house that was polluted with mites. I mixed one (four) ounce box of special to one gallon of whitewash and gave it a thorough whitewashing. I now defy anyone to find a louse about my hen house."

MORE CHICKENS

properly cared for mean more money. Proper care means a liberal use of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies as well as suitable food and housing. No poultry keeper ever failed because he put too much money into Death to Lice. Many do fail because they do not keep their flocks free from vermin. The most successful money-making poulterers are those who use the most Lamberts. We have remedies for all kinds of lice, on anything and everything. We put it up in all sizes of packages to suit all kinds of people. We have all kinds of good testimonials as to its efficacy.

PRICE LIST.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15. one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

WHAT SAVED JUDGE CLARK'S CHICKENS.

Scotch Plains, N. J., Sept. 13, 1900—Judge Clark, when not dispensing law and dealing out justice, devotes a great deal of his time to raising chickens and ducks. About two weeks ago his fowls were attacked with a disease which began carrying them off at an alarming rate, notwithstanding all his efforts to check the epidemic. Several authorities on chickens were consulted and it was agreed that the fowls were suffering from some form of cholera. A remedy was at last found to check the disease. This was procured from the Star Incubator Co., of Bound Brook, and it proved to be just the thing, and the Judge is once more happy and will begin at once to replenish his stock.

Gold A VIRGIN GOLD MINE Gold

is that owned by the

GOLDEN TREE

MINING AND MILLING CO.

IN THE HEART OF THE KITCHIKAN DISTRICT OF SOUTH EASTERN ALASKA, WHICH IS THE RICHEST GOLD BEARING PART OF THE WORLD.

It is located on the estuary known as "Thorn Arm" 600 miles north of Seattle and south of Dyea and Skagway, and has great natural advantages, being surrounded by the warm waters of the Japanese current. Like the Gulf Stream the water never freezes, modifying the temperature so that the mine can be worked the year round. The property is at tidewater and the ore can be carried to the smelters at light expense.

The entire property of the Golden Tree Mining and Milling Company is underlaid with the

RICHEST GOLD-BEARING QUARTZ,

which ledge ore now ASSAYS OVER $100 PER TON and gives promise of two to three times that amount.

The Golden Tree Mines are in the same contact and a short distance from the famous Sea Level Mine, recently capitalized for a large sum, and all its stock was sold in New York City. The Sea Level Mine is putting out enormous quantities of rich ore.

The Golden Tree Mines are far richer and show better prospects than the Sea Level ever did until it was developed.

Immediately surrounding the Golden Tree Mines are a number of other exceedingly profitable mines, such as the Gold Standard, Sea Breeze, Gold Coin, Gold Mountain, Sea Level, Gold Hill, Bragdon, Sutton and others.

The same rich vein of free gold, sulphides and tellurides runs under ALL this section of contiguous property. THIS IS NO EXAGGERATION OR DREAM, for results have been realized from all of these mines by actual work and development.

The stock of these companies, which sold a short time ago for a few cents a share, is now steadily bought by the knowing ones at par or more.

The Golden Tree Mining and Milling Company, capitalized for $2,000,000, at $25 per share, all fully paid up and non-assessable, and the directors have decided to offer to the public a limited amount of the Treasury Stock—8,000 shares at 25 cents on the dollar, viz., $6.25 per share net cash.

The Treasury stock is sold for the express purpose of putting in additional stamping and other machinery for the further development of the mines.

As soon as the money procured from this sale of stock is invested in crushers and other machinery, which it will be inside of six months, every share of this stock will be worth par.

It will easily pay an annual dividend of more than 10 per cent on its par value, or 40 per cent on the investment.

Fidelty in the management of the property is assured by the fact that Hon. John R. Rogers, Governor of the State of Washington, is the president of the company, and Hon. John H. Reevis, a Justice of the Supreme Court, is its vice-president.

This is a rare chance to make a safe and profitable investment which is inviting to the large and small investor alike. Orders of any size are acceptable.

In order that investors may be fully protected, the officers of the company have employed the firm of Gardenhire & Vandivert of New York City, as counsel. This is itself a guarantee for this well-known firm would not permit itself to even constructively indorse a proposition which it had not investigated and upon whose officials it could not rely.

Orders will receive prompt attention. Address

Mr. J. H. Doane, Gouverneur, N. Y., sends us the following clipping from the Gouverneur Free Press of July 31:

"A sale of a number of fowls for probably the largest price ever received by any poultry breeder in this section was made last week, when J. H. Doane sold a Black Minorca cock for $75.00, another, which had not yet made such a record as a prize winner, for $25.00, and five hens of the same strains of breeding for $15.00 each, making a total of $175.00 for the seven. The birds were shipped to California."

In his letter Mr. Doane writes regarding the above sale: "A 'Breeders' Card' in the American Fancier did the business." Further comment is unnecessary.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Country Gentleman, is responsible for the following:

NEW WHITE FOWL. — We clip the following from the Feathered World, England:

"Mr. Thornber writes: 'I have this season had the novelty of a few pure white chickens amongst my Houdans. They are beautifully crested, muffed and bearded, and have five toes—in all respects perfect Houdans, but white.'"

If this had happened in America, a new variety would be pushed for public favor just as soon as the white ones proved their ability to reproduce their kind.

White Houdans, as well as White Creve Cœurs, have from time to time appeared in flocks of these varieties bred in this country, but never seem to meet with much favor. The similarity with White Polish precludes their becoming a really striking sub-variety of their colored progenitors.

The White Spanish and White Java met with a similar fate, there not being "enough distinction with a difference" in the white sports of the black varieties when compared with white breeds having similar combs and make up.

The Hon. "Jack" Saunders will have charge of the Canadian exhibit of poultry at the Pan-American, and a better or more popular choice could not have been made.

The Costly Fishing Club will hold its annual meeting at the Arlington hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., October 24, 1901. New members will be initiated at Niagara Falls in ancient form, President John L. Cost being master of ceremonies.

There will be a large poultry, pigeon and Belgian Hare show held at Richmond, Va., October 7 to 12. Mr. Frank Jenkins is the secretary. Particulars will be found in another column of this issue.

We call the attention of readers of the American Fancier to the advertisement of Woodlawn Remedy Co., New York City. Belgian Hare breeders especially will find it profitable to write for prices on and catalogues describing Snufflene, a remedy that is considered to be one of the best on the market.

Chickens are growing remarkably well in most sections and especially in this locality. The grasshoppers are unusually abundant this season, and the frisky young chickens chase and devour them with a relish that no other food seems to afford them. The quality of the "springers" we have eaten this season is strictly first-class.

Two weeks ago the corn crop in the great corn belt of the West was in danger of being destroyed by intense and continued heat and the oat crop in many localities was claimed to be a failure. Happily, a cool and rainy spell set in and saved many fields of corn and also saved the calamity howlers a lot of wind-pipe exercise, although some of the pessimistic pencil pushers keep on writing dark and gloomy stuff about the bad prospects for the stock, &c. The fact is, poultry is not suffering at present and probably will not for months to come. There is abundant food for the unconfined chickens, which, supplemented judiciously with a moderate grain diet, will push them along until freezing weather arrives, when good judgment dictates a strong and merciless weeding out of the surplus stock. While grain will be higher next fall and winter, the prices of poultry should be correspondingly higher, and that will more than even matters.

This is the time of the year when pullets' eggs begin to roll into the egg baskets, and to judge by the size of many, the wisdom of selling eggs by weight is very evident. Some of these eggs fried with the "sunny side" up are hardly as large as the sleeve buttons worn by the average sport of the colored population. It's an imposition to sell such puny things by the dozen.

The 1901 catalogue of the American Buff Wyandotte Club is a very interesting book. It is excellently printed and contains a number of articles by prominent Buff Wyandotte fanciers that are not only readable but valuable. We congratulate Secretary Wooden on his success in compiling such a timely book, devoted to one of the most popular buff fowls of the century.

Mr. Wm. Phillips, Jr., Amsterdam, N. Y., purchased a fine pen of Buff Rocks from the well-known yards of Mr. Overbaugh, of Hanover, Pa., and expects to make a bid for the Buff Rock honors at the coming shows of 1901 and 1902.

Big Clam Bake and Field Day.

The annual clam bake and field day of the Adirondack Poultry Club will be held at Sammons' Grove, 2½ miles from Johnstown or Fonda (New York Central Railroad station), on Wednesday, August 14th. Stages will run every hour from 1 to 3 o'clock p. m., from Fonda or Johnstown. The members of the Club extend a hearty invitation to all poultry fanciers and others to take part in the festivities of the day.

Editor American Stock-Keeper: Without doubt the many friends of "Nutmeg" are wondering why they do not hear from him(?) of times. But while he is keeping "quiet," he has evidently been "sawing wood" vigorously. He evidently thought his present home not quite up-to-date, so purchased a plaoe in the town of Stratford, Conn., on the celebrated "Silver Row," but on closer inspection found too many "brunettes" among his neighbors, so made a trade for a fine residence in Shelton, farfamed as the birthplace of Postmaster "Billy" Holmes and "Dr." W. S. Clark, both bosom friends of "Nutmeg." We understand the "Manhattan Poultry House" is to be moved to the new quarters and fitted up as a hall, where a new club called the "Nutmeg Triumvirate," and composed of said "Nutmeg," Holmes and Clark, will hold meetings every night. Probably when they are in working order the Stock Keeper will have whole columns every week from "Nutmeg's" gifted pen. "N."

The American Rose Comb Brown Leghorn Club.

Editor American Fancier: The second annual catalogue of the American Rose Comb Brown Leghorn Club is ready for distribution. The catalogue is neatly gotten up and contains timely articles on mating, breeding and caring for our favorites from the shell to the show room. These articles with numerous cuts and half tones make this a very interesting and instructive catalogue to all who are interested in this meritorious breed. It is the desire of the Club to keep on increasing the membership by adding new names to the list. All who are interested should send to the secretary for catalogue, application blanks, etc., which are sent free. Membership fee is only $1 and dues $1 per year. The following officers have been elected for the ensuing year: President, W. W. Kulp, Pottstown, Pa; vice-presidents, L. L. Doolittle, Bernardston, Mass; secretary and treasurer, C. R. Milhous, Spencer, Indiana; executive committee, Louis H. Boyles, Meadville, Pa., Charles M. Zink, New Albany, Ind., Marion Ake, Fort Wayne, Ind., Miss Sara A. Little, Malcome, N. Y., Floyd C. Tabor, Worcester, N. J., George Stahmer, Oak Park, Ill.; advisory board, Henry E. Voight, Hamburg, Wis., W. W. Cadman, St. Thomas, Ontario, Can., W. G. Fronheiser, Pottstown, Pa., Wm. Brown, Cassville, Ga., Mrs. Ben Matthews, Huntsville, Alabama, N. Stedem, Marshall, Mo., C. E. Martin, Seward, Ill., F. R. Ecker, Lowell, Mich., J. B Grable, Harvey, Ill., J. E. Toronto's Great Exposition.

When this institution was commenced, 22 years ago, its most sanguine supporters had no idea that it would ever attain the colossal proportions it has reached and has been admitted by those who have visited it, to be the largest annual exhibition in America, and by others the world is included. However be this as it may with the close proximity to Buffalo this year, it promises to outshine any of its predecessors judging by the programme of attractions received. Many of our readers cannot arrange to visit the Pan American during the holding of the poultry exhibit, and we heartily commend them if they can arrange their holidays to take in both Buffalo and Toronto from August 27th to Sept. 6th, when they will see the finest display of live stock, poultry and pigeons that will be gathered together on any exhibition grounds this fall. Commencing more as a local exhibition the scope of this great fair has widened until it has become an international one, more especially in poultry and pigeons. This year exhibits will be entered from the New England States, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Maryland and Illinois. With the generous treatment accorded all by the arrangement with $2 first, $1 second, and 25 cents entry (no strings whatever) and no restrictions or coop fees this year should receive the hearty support of every fancier. Entries close August 14th and should be sent to the secretary at Toronto.

—Pigeon men and hen men should push the American Fancier. Advertisers claim they get better results than from any other paper.

The Poultry Show at South Carolina Inter-State and West Indian Exposition.

Editor American Fancier: While all the final arrangements have not yet been made, I am yet able to give some of the more important points to your readers.

The dates selected are January 20th to 29th, 1902. At least four judges of national repute will officiate and as many more as in the opinion of the management will be needed will be added later on. Judging will be by score card and every effort will be made to have awards up at the earliest.

The American Poultry Association has been invited to meet at Charleston during the poultry show, and it is earnestly hoped that they will see fit to accept this invitation, as no doubt good will come to them as well as us. But should the A. P. A. not come, we will still endeavor to pull off the best poultry show the South ever had.

The main point, and while mentioned last yet the most important to exhibitors, the money for all premiums and other expenses will be in the bank before the time for the show. We hope to have our brother fanciers from all over these United States and Canada—in fact, from the whole continent—with some of their exhibits with us, and I may here state that the city of Charleston will give them royal treatment and the fanciers of South Carolina will do all in their power to make the stay of any visiting brother in their metropolis as pleasant as only South Carolinians know how to do.

I will as things develop endeavor to keep your readers informed, and trust to be able to meet many of them next January in the "City by the Sea," where there are spring breezes most any time in midwinter, when the more northern states are suffering by snow and ice.

My Lady in Blue.

I have a little friend that I see every night
As the shadows lengthening fall;
She's up at peep o' day, blithe, debonair and gay,
Ever ready when I call.

She wears a jaunty dress that fits her to a T,
And her comb hangs over one ear—
An ear that is white and pearly and bright;
I hug her when no one is near.

Her face, it is red where the blood shows through,
And her eye has the tint of sunset glow;
That hue of health and physical wealth
Never came from drink, I know.

She has a pretty leg encased in blue;
The same is the color of her waist,
Except in the places where dark heavy laces
Show forth in exquisite taste.

There's a subtle sort of charm in the way she holds her head,
A je ne sais quoi in her motion;
Stately and grand as if born to command
In her old home across the ocean.

Now, I must confess that there are times
When Society is a bore:
When I'm talked almost to death and can hardly draw my breath,
Till my soul hankers after human gore.

'Tis then I cut and run before the tale's half done;
I care not what offence I'm giving—
For, under a tree, with my lady on my knee,
I feel that life's worth living.

So, of all my lady friends, the one that I love most,
Except some humans, eight or ten,
Is my lady clad in blue—in feathers, it is true!
My little Blue Andalusian hen!

Indian Game Club Catalogue.

Editor American Fancier: The annual catalogue of the American Indian Game Club is ready for distribution. It is brim full of useful information to all interested in the Indian Game, giving the origin, history, points on Standard shape and color, also on mating and fitting for exhibition, etc. A copy has been mailed to all members, and it is the desire of this Club that every breeder and everybody interested in the "aristocrat of the poultry kingdom" have a copy of this valuable book. Let us hear from everyone interested. A two cent stamp will pay the "freight," and if you haven't the stamp send just the same, the secretary has one. Address,

The Great Virginia Show.

Editor American Fancier: For the first time in several years, Richmond, Va, is to have a first-class show. Within the past year two strong associations have been formed, one the Virginia Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association and the other the Southern Belgian Hare Association. The fancy has taken on new life throughout the entire South and the members have expressed a determination to give a show second to none. The date has been set October 7th to 12th, which is the week of the great Richmond carnival, and will be held in a commodious building erected expressly for that purpose. The classification is almost as complete as the Pan-American Exposition, and cash prizes will be paid in every department. Prizes in the poultry department will be paid on cock and hen, cockerel and pullet. In the pigeon department a very full and complete classification has been arranged and embracing every variety. The pet stock department embraces every kind of pet, including cage birds, rats, mice, ferrets, cats, cavies and dogs. The Belgian hare department is receiving special attention, and the Association proposes to make it the largest Belgian hare show ever held in the South. The superintendent, Mr. R. C Brauer, is thoroughly qualified for the position, the cooping will be uniform and the entrance fee includes coop, feed and attention. The premium list will be ready for mailing August 15th, and those wishing a copy should send their name and address immediately to Frank Jenkins, Secretary, 917 Bank Street, Richmond, Va.

Mating and Breeding Buff Wyandottes.

At this stage of the Buff Wyandotte, each breeder can look into his own history and see wherein his success has been attained to some degree at least, and in doing so myself it seems to me that the method or system of knowing the ancestry of my birds has done more to improve them than any other one thing, that the rapid strides made by our favorites are due more to the systematic way we have bred them than anything else.

I like to know as far back as possible the ancestry of all my breeding birds. It enables me to mate them up more understandingly, as, for instance, I would not think of mating pullets whose sire had a large comb to a male who had the same defect in comb. Just the reverse. I would select females whose sire had a small comb. The same can be said of all the different sections. All birds fail in some section, and should be mated to such as were strong in this particular point and had descended from those who were also strong in that particular. No one can tell by the looks of a frog how far it can jump or by the looks of a pullet how well she will breed. We should have some way of securing her eggs when laid, setting them that we can mark her chicks when hatched, that at maturity we can know which of our hens are our producers. These can be retained, and those whose chicks are worthless can either be discarded altogether or mated to another male the following year. Often one finds the best exhibition birds are not the best breeders; that the poorest feathered female in the mating produced his best cockerels; that did he not know she was a good producer he would have sold her at his first opportunity, as, from an exhibition standpoint, she was his poorest, and not caring to carry over all his seasoned breeders he would select his best and dispose of the others thus disposing of his best through ignorance.

Very often we notice that several of our best cockerels closely resemble each other. They have the same sort of a good comb. The same is true regarding pullets, and, did we but know it, some one hen has produced them all. Did we know her, how valuable she is in more ways than one. Suppose all her sons come with good combs, and you have a male that is a cracker-jack, excepting in comb; that you mate him to this hen that produces good combs, are not your chances of improvement far greater than in any other way you can go at it? Again, take it in breeding males, there is a marked difference in own brothers, in their production. For an illustration, allow me to use some of Vermont's horses, who are highly spoken of, to illustrate this point. There are two very good sons of Daniel Lambert, who, by the way, is considered a first-class sire. His two sons, Ben Franklin and Addison Lambert (own brothers), were much admired and strong rivals, Addison Lambert finally proving his superiority as to speed performance, and was, in consequence, well patronized with the best mares. When the colts of these two own brothers were developed, it was discovered that Ben Franklin was the best producer, and, to make a long story short, he was sold for ten thousand dollars, and Addison Lambert changed hands at one thousand dollars. It was the producing qualities that made one worth ten times as much as the other. Again, when Senator Stanford was looking around for sires to head his stock farm in California, with plenty of means at his command, he secured what was then considered the best stallion of the day, in Mohawk Chief. He also purchased his brother, Electioneer, at a much less price. Mohawk Chief was bred to all the best mares, and when the progeny of these two sires were developed, Electioneer colts were much the better, and in time he became the greatest producer the world ever has seen. So great were his producing qualities that Mr. Stanford has said, without contradiction, that he never sired a colt that couldn't trot in 2:30 or better. The same facts are true in breeding cattle and sheep. All successful live-stock breeders retain a producing sire until they develop a son to replace him. One that has been tried and not found wanting. It seems to me that in all branches of breeding the pedigree of the stock is carefully guarded, except in breeding poultry, and here we find the most hap-hazard methods employed with the most hap-hazard results.

It doesn't seem to me to be experimenting when we endeavor to get our breeding down to a system, or on a basis where we can profit by last season's mistakes. What we should strive to accomplish is to breed the greatest number of good birds from the least number of chicks hatched, and not to resort to a large quantity, in hopes a few good ones will crop out. Much more satisfaction is derived from raising a few good birds from a few birds hatched, than from many hatched. If I wanted to purchase a cockerel and had the choice of two, one whose dam was known to be either a producer or an exhibition bird, and the dam of the other was unknown, who would not make choice of the one having the former dam? Many a calf is sold on the fact that its dam made so many pounds of butter in a given number of days, and the greater the record of the dam the more money her sons are worth. And when they demonstrate that they produce heifers that are heavy milkers, seldom can one be purchased at any price.

It seems to me, brother fancier, that we are not progressing as rapidly as our brother breeders who have taken up cattle, for instance. To be sure our hen will not live as many years as their cow, yet we can demonstrate her producing capacity in one season, to their being obliged to wait three or more. Who ever heard of a hen selling for a good round sum, simply because she was the dam of one or more first prize winners, a cock bird that was the sire of winners? And why not? Until we place this value on our producers, the rank and file of our breeders will stick to the old "good enough" way to the detriment of our variety. In breeding dogs, after a dog has made a certain number of wins at exhibitions that have a certain number of entries, he becomes known by the fact. Think they are termed Challenge class. The Belgian hare is pedigree known, and yet our poultry goes on in the same old way handicapped by the lack of attention on the part of their breeders to this vital question.—C. S. Mattison in the American Buff Wyandotte Club Catalogue.

Queer Owls are Found.

Red Bud, Ill., Aug. 5.—Three owls that appear to be part monkeys have been found near here. Two of the birds are now in possession of Phil. Offerding, a hotel keeper of this city, and are viewed with great curiosity. The owls are three months old now and so far have shown no signs of feathering, and this adds to the monkey likeness.

They have large, staring eyes like the owl's, even the beak being depressed, but the forehead runs back like that of the monkey. The hoot which has made the owl well known is absent. The vocal powers of these monkey-faced beings are somewhat impaired. They remain silent unless disturbed, when they let out a hiss like that of a snake.

They were taken from a nest in the woods near Red Bud about two months ago by George Carpenter. He was out hunting and seeing an owl fly off a nest high up in a tree climbed up to see what was in it and discovered three owls, who looked as though they might have had a monkey in the family. He took them to town, gave one away, and left the other two with the hotel keeper.

OFFER 200,000 SHARES TREASURY STOCK AT $3.00 PER SHARE.

THE CALIFORNIA KING GOLD MINE COMPANY owns 23 claims in Picacho Basin, four miles from the Colorado River, in California, and twenty miles by direct road from Yuma, Arizona. . . . . .

DEVELOPMENT work has been in progress for six years, and more than ten thousand feet of shafts, drifts levels and cuts have been completed and paid for.

Upwards of fifteen million tons of ore are now ready for the mill, all of which will be mined by open cuts at a nominal cost.

A CONTRACT has been entered into for the erection of a mill and cyanide plant capable of handling 1,000 tons of ore daily, which will be completed this year. The Directors guarantee that this plant will be placed in operation, regardless of the amount of treasury stock subscribed. The net profit after commencing work will exceed $60,000 a month, and probably reach $100,000 a month within a year. The ore in sight will supply such a plant for more than forty years, assuring an annual return of 20 per cent or more on the investment.

There is no promotion stock. No salaries to officers. Every dollar realized from the sale of stock, goes into the treasury to pay for the plant. Reports of J. Ralston Bell, London; William A. Farish, Denver; Emerson Gee, Denver; P.C. DuBois, Berkeley, Cal.; J. L. Shepherd, and others, all eminent mining engineers, strongly recommend this property.

This is an Opportunity to invest in a large Mining Property of known value, managed by experienced mining men in the Interest of stockholders

Application will be made for listing the stock on the Boston Stock Exchange. Prospectus and any information desired will be furnished on application. Subscriptions received by Chicken-Eating Horse.

The fondness for spring chickens is not confined to Methodist preachers out in the country. In or about Colesburg there is a horse that is equal to a whole Methodist conference in his ravages upon a poultry yard. The horse belongs to Mr. J. R. Stovay, and it is no unusual thing for him to eat a half dozen spring chickens at a meal. Last Sunday for dinner he consumed fourteen. He runs after them and as he catches them devours them, feathers and all. The appetite on the part of the equine has only recently developed, but it has been sufficiently voracious to put Mr. Stoval out of the poultry business in short order.—Henderson (Ky.) Gleaner.

Confessions of a Reformed Hen Raiser.

[Address by Mr W. C. CALKINS before the Galesburg, Ill., Poultry Association.]

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: Among this gathering of representative men, who have devoted many hustling, thinking years to the worthy industry of farming, there are doubtless many who have made a success as henologists. Among such I feel strangely out of place. It was not permitted that I should sit among you as a listener and absorb rather than radiate wisdom on the subjects you have assembled to discuss. It was not permitted that I should be left alone with my sorrow and allow a bitter chicken experience to remain locked up in the safe deposit vault of my inner consciousness. But, on the contrary, your committee, with a lack of sympathy which I never expected in those who call themselves my friends, insisted that my experience in raising poultry was too valuable to keep from a waiting world.

Not long ago a man named Erastus Wyman wrote a book, entitled "How to Succeed in Business." The book was just published and placed on sale when its author failed for $2,000,000. It does not necessarily follow that this unfortunate incident detracted from the value of the book. People decided that if they read it carefully and then pursued a course directly opposite from that outlined by Erastus, they stood a rare chance of being successful. From this point of view my remarks may have a two-fold value to those of you who contemplate making a specialty of the chicken industry; they will either discourage you altogether or point out the only possible way to make a failure as complete as mine.

I woke up one morning with $4,000 and an idea. I still have the idea. It was this I learned from observation that the average hen could make a table d'hote dinner off a manure heap and lay an egg every working day. I also learned that this proud city of ours was entirely at the mercy of a few indifferent, non-union hens, distributed among the farmers round about, for its supply of fresh, sweet-scented eggs. Putting the two together (the money and the idea), I thought I saw a chance to promote an industry which would rival John D Rockefeller's oil plant when it came to a matter of declaring dividends. It was evident that there was nothing to do but collect a large, choice company of fowls, give them a happy home, and then lean back in my bounteous office chair and softly murmur, "Lay on, McDuff," or whatever their various names happened to be.

I therefore purchased a tract of rolling prairie. It was covered with a heavy growth of green, blue grass, shaded in spots by stately elms and flowering catalpas, and irrigated by a sparkling, babbling brooklet. It was a spot that would make a hen's life one long dream of happiness. It was a resort that would have coaxed eggs out of the most barren prospects. It was here I built a chicken house of such mammoth proportions that it resembled a snowshed on the Northern Pacific. It was built on the most improved plan of architecture. I gathered my ideas from personal visits to all the poultry farms in the country that were worth while, and every time I visited a new one I came home and changed my plans. There was an entire suite of rooms for every particular grade of chickenkind. There were drawing rooms for the aristocratic and hospitals for the feeble. There was a souvenir building for the Plymouth Rocks; there were temples for the Brahmas, improved foot-baths for the White Leghorns, and china closets for the Cochin Chinas. I hired a small boy to do the scratching for them, so they might sleep during the early morning hours. I built a stable for my horse and delivery wagon, sunk a well, fitted up an office and bought a burglar proof safe in which to keep the eggs pending a rise in price. Then I began to look around for tenants. This was difficult. At that time all hens looked alike to me. I was compelled to take the seller's word as to their pedigree and habits. I have since learned that hens, as a rule, do not always carry out the agreements of their former owners.

After getting into touch with every man in Illinois who had a hen he was willing to part with, I secured enough to open up for business. The first roll call showed 375 present. Statistics show that one energetic hen will lay one egg a day, on an average. I did not have an average around the place, so I substituted a good, soft, well upholstered nest for each one of the 375. In a short time, through the courtesy of a dozen haughty roosters which I introduced among those present, and with the help of two steam-heated incubators, I swelled the total number to 1,260. Then I felt that my troubles were at an end. I had spent enough money to supply the town with eggs for years at Easter prices. I had purchased everything from sachet powder for the prevention of lice to ground bone for aiding their digestion. I bought drinking fountains, hovers, foot-baths, steam heaters and egg cases. I naturally supposed that it was all over but putting the income in the bank. I was hugging a delusion. It soon developed into a proposition of stupendous proportions. My health began to fail and my placid brow, on which my earlier years of struggle had left no mark, became as corrugated as a washboard.

I decided to secure a manager for my plant, one who knew the hen business, and give myself a needed vacation. I employed a man who came to me well recommended—by himself. He claimed he had made the chicken business a life study; that he was on speaking terms with every hen in Knox county; that he knew every ill that chicken flesh is heir to, knew all their little troubles, their faults and their accomplishments. When I thought of all he said he knew, I wondered how I got him so cheap. As soon as he entered the place he became a universal favorite. Day after day the hens grew more fond of him. They would eat from his hand, climb upon his knee and permit him to shampoo them and manicure their toenails. I turned the whole business over to him and went away on a two months' vacation, thinking that the next hen census would show a remarkable increase and that the absolute control of the egg market of the world would be in my grasp. But I reckoned without my host, also without my manager. When I returned to the scene of my labors, bringing with me the latest style of cash register to figure up the profits, I found out of 1,260 happy, well contented hens only 27 were gathered to welcome me, and some of them did not seem particularly glad to see me. The attendance reminded me of a Galesburg Sunday school right after the scholars had their Christmas tree. I was never able to find out to my entire satisfaction just where the rest of those hens were. It any of them had been guilty of an egg in my absence there was no evidence of it. Doubtless some were visiting their neighbors, others had married and moved away, but my manager assured me that the great majority had passed into the dim-hazy unknown. It was evident that there was not a hen family of all that little community but mourned some dear departed. What I had fondly hoped to rear was robust, able, ambitious, conscientious hens, who, as soon as their education was completed, would voluntarily start out in the cold world with their mother's blessing and scratch for themselves. Instead, through the efforts of my manager, I had raised a lot of pampered pullets who were too languid to scratch, too blase to chase butterflies, who would not eat a ladybug unless it had been dressed and garnished, who considered it bad form to lay eggs, and demanded worms right off the ice.

Here we see an analogy of human life. Many men have pondered over the fact that a hard working laborer of the submerged classes, in the face of adversity, will rear a large, thrifty family, while the multi-millionaire is not able to bring up in luxury a single child. In the same way consider the hen. She will pick up a seemingly precarious living in a cinder pile and the neighbor's garden plot, will cross the streets in front of trolley cars, run the gauntlet of cats, dogs, coons and other midnight prowlers, and live to become a great-great-grandmother. But just take that same identical hen, shield her from the world's rough hands, give her a nest of velvet and rosewood, feed her on Pratt's Pre-digested Pellets for Pullets, water her from a carbonated drinking fountain, take her for a walk each day along some sheltered promenade, put her in bed each night and awaken her with an alarm clock—and does she reward you for all this loving care? No; on the contrary, she ceases to be a producer, and the only reason that she does not become a social parasite is because she becomes a corpse.

Somewhere on some arch, tablet, monument, or other enduring memorial someone inscribed this portentous thought:

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: 'Don't trust a hen.'"

Some Necessary Show Reforms.

A great many complaints are made from time to time by exhibitors as to the treatment their birds meet with at exhibitions, and I am afraid that the majority of these complaints produce little or no effect in the quarters towards which they are directed; probably because the persons with whom complaints originate are regarded as more or less interested, and their complaints are supposed to be exaggerated accordingly. This may or may not be the real reason why such complaints recur perennially; but at all events I myself may claim to be an independent judge of certain matters upon which I propose to write a short article, because I do not exhibit any birds of my own, and consequently am not in the position of a man who has experienced any particular loss in consequence of which he makes a specific complaint. My points about to be detailed below are based upon what I have seen during a not inconsiderable experience of shows in all parts of the country.

1. Reception of exhibits.—A show room ought to be in readiness for the reception of the exhibits some hours before the earliest are likely to arrive, and the birds as they come ought to be unpacked immediately, one by one, and be there and then placed in their respective pens. Instead of this, at many shows, the birds. on their arrival, are not unpacked for some hours, during which time I have known them to be placed in cold passages, exposed to draughts, besides being kept hungry and thirsty, as many of them must be after a long railway journey. Apart from this there is the possibility, by no means an uncommon one, of birds being ill and needing attention, and the not unknown case of a bird having died on the railway journey; when if the basket had been opened immediately on arrival, it could have been ascertained at once how long previously death had occurred. I was once asked to look at a bird at a show which had been kept all night unpacked, and found next morning dead and quite cold. Had this bird been unpacked on arrival, the chances are that it would have been found to be quite warm if death had occurred whilst in the hands of the railway company.

2. Feeding during a show.—I am thoroughly of opinion that the custom of giving biscuit food to poultry during a show is fraught with much danger. It is thrown into the pens and what remains unconsumed is trampled under foot by the bird and becomes mixed with sawdust, disinfectants, etc., and the bird is liable to be made ill in consequence; apart from that, if there is anything on the floor of the pen to contaminate the food, what is left of it quickly turns sour; and it is a mystery to me how it comes about that so few birds die as a result of this. Certain it is, and there are plenty of poultry keepers who will bear out this statement, that birds on returning from shows frequently exhibit symptoms of diarrhœa, which, in my opinion, is due to nothing else but to their feeding upon pieces of damp sour biscuit meal, which, perhaps, were given to them at the commencement of the show, and remain uneaten until the last day. My contention is that the only safe method of feeding poultry during a show, is to give them good sound corn, and once a day, at least, some fresh green stuff; there is no reason why a little granulated meat should not be given to them in a dry form, but I am afraid if that plan were adopted, the men to whom the feeding was entrusted would give far more than they should give in some cases. I therefore suggest as the best method of feeding poultry during a show, that they should have corn morning and evening, and green food at mid-day. I do not think any mischief would follow this method such as, undoubtedly, follows the method of giving damp biscuit meal.

3. Bedding in pens.—I consider that the use of sawdust for the floors of cages is very undesirable, especially when damp biscuit meal is given, as mentioned in the preceding paragraph. I have known plenty of cases in which birds have become crop-bound through feeding from damp biscuit meal which has become mixed up with the sawdust on the floor. Sawdust is especially dangerous too, if it has been prepared with disinfectants. On the other hand I do not like chaff on the floors because it is apt to be all scratched out, and if that does not happen it is likely to become clogged together into lumps which stick to the birds' feet and make them generally uncomfortable. Nor again do I believe in sanded floors, as the sand has no absorbent property and simply tends to increase the mass of refuse which one sees birds trying to extricate themselves from at many shows. There can be no doubt that the best thing to use on the floors of pens is peat moss dust, which cannot be scratched out, is warm and comfortable, absorbent of moisture, and thus keeps the floor sweet and wholesome, and moreover does not need to be cleaned out. In a properly managed show the attendants would go round every morning with a fresh supply of moss dust, and add a little here and there to replenish the pen's supply wherever it seemed necessary.

4. The grit question.—There are still a great many shows held at which no grit of any kind is ever offered to the birds This should not be. Birds which are in the habit of having a daily supply of grit when at home, will have their internal arrangements totally upset if that supply is suddenly withheld from them for two or three days. Therefore, I should advise that no valuable bird ever be sent to a show where the management do not supply grit to the exhibits. As to the grit itself, in many places where it is supplied it is useless, or even worse than useless. I have seen samples of grit given to poultry and pigeons at exhibitions which I should be very sorry to give to my own birds. I have also seen over and over again poultry grit given to pigeons, and pigeon grit given to poultry, as if there were no member of the committee sufficiently intelligent to see that the men in charge distributed the different sizes in a sensible way. The safest arrangement which a show committee can make is to have a supply of flint grit and oyster shell in the proportions of one part of flint to three of oyster shell, and let that be graded into at least three sizes—one size for large poultry, another for small poultry and large pigeons, and another for the small varieties of pigeons—of course, an extra large size would be required for turkeys and geese if present. The men in charge should not be allowed to distribute this in handfuls, as is the usual method adopted; they should be supplied with small measures (two pennyworth of half ounce pill boxes would answer very well), and then they should be instructed how much to give to each variety, and this should be done not only once, but every morning.

5. The Storage of Baskets.—It is not my business to pass comments upon the conduct of other people, nor do I wish to reflect in any way upon the honor of judges to whom the disposal of awards is given at our principal exhibitions, and less so because I believe them on the whole to be an upright body of men who do their duty faithfully. But I must say that I regard the method adopted at the majority of shows of placing owners' baskets underneath the pens in which their birds are exhibited as a direct incentive to unfairness. This, however, is a matter which those more interested than I am can decide for themselves. For my own part that is one of the first things I should like to see done away with in the interest of the fancy at large. Apart from that it would be much more satisfactory if some arrangement could be made by which hampers could be examined whilst the birds are being exhibited—the straw left in them be shaken up, and those from which it has disappeared supplied with a little more, so that all would be clean and comfortable for the return journey. I do think fanciers have a right to complain that at most exhibitions when the show is over those in charge seem to have no other object in life than to get rid of the stock as quickly as possible, regardless of the condition in which the exhibits are returned to their owners.

6. The Condition of Exhibition Pens.—I do not know whether it has ever occurred to anyone particularly concerned, but I am entirely of opinion that a great deal of contagious disease might be spread by the use of calico strips such as we see placed between rows of pens if that calico has been used at two or three exhibitions previously without having been properly washed and disinfected. The firms who contract for this sort of work ought to have their attention drawn to such a matter, and committees should insist that new calico entirely be used for the purpose, or that if it has been used before, it has been properly cleansed and disinfected. As regards the pens themselves, they should be examined, and the committee should make it their business to see that they, too, have been cleansed since the last time they were in use. I think at the principal shows new timber is used for the benching each year, but this is not always the case at small shows, and I might suggest to those interested in small shows that some discretion should be used as regards the use of timber that has been used at former exhibitions.

7. Unhealthy Exhibits.—It is amazing to what lengths negligence is allowed to go even at some of our very best shows in the matter of unhealthy exhibits. At dog shows the animals have to pass a veterinary surgeon before they are allowed in the exhibition at all, but at poultry shows no such arrangement exists, and, consequently, we see birds in all stages of roup, intermingled with healthy birds, to whom they communicate the disease with results which it would be impossible to limit. Unless a bird seems nearly dead, or has got roup in such an advanced state that it is a positive disgrace to the show, no one seems to trouble about having it removed. Here we have the secret of many and many an outbreak of disease in yards and lofts which have previously been quite free from it. This matter is one which especially affects pigeon fanciers. I have known Carriers to be sent round from show to show in the most pitiable condition, as though the object of the owner were to keep a winning bird "going" as long as he could. The only remedy for this sort of thing lies in the hands of the judges. If a bird in such a condition as that were passed over (as it might with good reason be passed over) because prizes should not be given to birds unless they are in a condition of perfect health, this sort of thing would cease automatically.

I am afraid I must draw to a close, or this article will be too long. The points I have mentioned above do not by any means comprise all that might be said about the mismanagement of shows. I want them, however, to form a nucleus for discussion, and they may, perhaps, have suggested one or two points which have not been taken account of by promoters and supporters of exhibitions. The number of shows is increasing now at so rapid a pace that it will behoove the fancier who wishes to be successful to make a selection from those shows, and if he is a wise man he will select those at which the arrangements are such as can admit of no criticism, and in the same way will those who are interested in promoting shows have to learn that their success will depend not only upon the amount of prize money which is forthcoming, but also upon the manner in which they treat the birds entrusted to their care, and upon the general arrangements which they make in the interests of those who support them.—W. PIGEONS.

Pigeon Hints.

With the glorious weather we have been having for the last week or two, the aspect of the breeding season has still further improved, and if the young fancier can only rise to the occasion he may to a great extent make up for the bad results of the earlier months of the year. The results of the past month certainly showed great improvement and young ones were much more in evidence than had been the case previously, but through it all there had been more or less one bad influence which had seriously affected the rapid growth and development of the young ones in the nest and in some cases even proved fatal in its effects; this was the rapid fall in the temperature towards evening, even after a day of almost tropical heat, while in the early morning frosts were anything but uncommon. Such rapid changes of temperature could not but act injuriously on the barely covered squabs, and even if they survived the ordeal it was generally at the expense of strength and development. Luckily things have again changed for the better; frosts are a thing of the past, the nights are warm and equable, and the young ones can be almost seen to grow. Better than all, cases of illness and weakness among the stock have become much more rare, and this is especially noticeable among the young ones still in the nest, while those of older growth are growing stronger and developing in a manner that must gladden the hearts of their owners, who a short time ago had been almost inclined to give up in despair.

A few cases of roup in the nest have cropped up, but these in nearly every case have been handed down from the parents, and could have well been prevented had the old ones been separated and got into proper condition for breeding before again being returned to the breeding loft. It is in such cases as these that want of thought is so often shown by the novice, and it is to save him from such hardly and dearly bought experience that I have so many times given the warning in the past. He must not be content with doctoring the young ones, and even in some cases putting them out of the way, and disinfecting the nesting places, pans, etc., to prevent infection, and leaving the old ones to go to nest again without being certain that they are free from the taint of the disease. What is still further needed is to put the old ones themselves through a course of treatment, and while this is going on they should be kept separated and isolated from the rest of the breeding stock. While thus separated they should be given a roup pill morning and evening, and as a still further aid in the purification the latter dose may occasionally be varied by a pinch of Epsom salts.

Again, with regard to the stock birds, there is another danger to be apprehended, and that is the liability of the hens going to nest again too rapidly and thus bring off another batch of young ones long before the former hatch are in a position to feed themselves. Nor is this the only danger, for when intent on the new nest the young ones are sure to be only looked after in a very half-hearted manner, and although with the present warmth of the atmosphere they are not likely to suffer from not being brooded over, yet they are not likely to grow and develop properly if only half fed. At this stage the young fancier can do a great deal to remedy the defect by hand feeding, but he must be very careful how he proceeds in the kind of food to be given. While during the transition stage he would do well to see that the young ones have a good padding of well rubbed straw in the nest pan, so that they shall miss the attentions of the old birds as little as possible. It is astonishing how the warmth will bring on free laying hens, and several cases have just been brought to my notice where the young ones have been almost entirely left to their own devices by the time they have reached only eight or ten days old. Such cases are only likely to occur in the very heart of the summer, but it is only by careful observation and attention that the young fancier finds out when it occurs, and if he does not at once rise to the occasion he may lose both young ones by delaying to look after them. When the neglect approaches desertion he must endeavor to find foster parents for the helpless little squabs, or he must provide artificial warmth and bring them up by hand. When the young are still under the soft food stage he can commence with thickened oatmeal gruel, and from this proceed gradually to more solid food by the introduction of well crushed and softened corns, such as maples, tares, and a little wheat. By the time the young ones are three weeks old they can be fed altogether on the soaked grain, and here it will be found that they will thrive best and that it can be administered best if maples form the almost entire diet.

As to the actual manner of feeding the young squabs, there can be little doubt that a syringe with a rather wide mouthpiece will answer best in the first stage and also when the grain is well crushed, but afterwards the plan must be slightly modified. Some fanciers are adepts at feeding from the mouth, but others have a great dislike to such a proceeding, and in this respect I must own that I agree with them, while again others find that they cannot well accomplish the task by such means, but instead only succeed in filling the crop with moisture or blowing it out with wind. When feeding with the soaked grain, again, a little care must be taken in handling the bird, or great damage may be done to the soft, yielding beak of the young one being fed. The head should be held firmly, but carefully, so as to prevent the bird from struggling, the beak opened sufficiently to allow the corn to be dropped in bit by bit, and time allowed for the bird to swallow each grain. The great thing to be avoided is not to force either of the mandibles out of place, and this is of great importance in the case of the stouter beaked varieties, for if it is not seen to they may in time become fixed in a wrong position and assume what is generally known as "twisted beak," when the bird will have much difficulty in picking up the corn when it comes to feed itself, while, if good birds, they will be ruined as far as exhibition is concerned.—W. White Belgian Hares Again.

Editor American Fancier: Noticing the article on White Belgian Hares written by Mr. Smith, and as I am the principal one who is advertising the White Belgian, I think it is meant for me.

The object of those who are trying to give the black eye to the White Belgian Hare and its breeders seems to be to keep the public from taking up this variety of the Belgian Hare, and I find all who have been at this work so far are deeply interested in the rufus reds Now, when one has had the experience with this animal I have had and have had letters from a number of honorable fanciers, both ladies and gentlemen, who are an honor to the ranks of American fanciers, then to be told by

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 150th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

those who have had no experience and are only guessing that the White Belgian Hare is only the result of a cross of some kind. I say that goes down hard.

Mr. Smith says he has been told that a cross with a common white rabbit will produce a White Belgian Hare. I have never tried it and shall not, as I have no need to do so, but it is my opinion that that would produce a mess of spotted rabbits, while it would possibly give a fairly good White Belgian every now and then. But what could one expect to breed from such a cross? My experience with my different strains of White Belgians is that all come true to color, but they are albinos and bred from albinos, and I have good reasons to believe others who are breeding them have the same. There has not been time enough for crossing, as it is not a year since the White Belgian Hare was first introduced in this country. I agree with Mr. Smith that anyone who makes the cross he refers to and sells them to the public as pure bred is a fraud and not a true fancier; but I would have Mr. Smith understand that I have as true and honest an animal in the White Belgian Hare as ever the rufus reds are or will be and are not made by a cross, as he would have all to believe.

Mr. Smith says that there is no use for a White Belgian, because any schoolboy could breed them. I say there is just as much of a fancier's skill needed to breed a first class White Belgian Hare as there is to breed a white fowl of any variety.

There is no use trying to down these white hares; if they are a fraud and have no merits they will go down themselves. But we ask fairplay for them, and if they are to be downed by their enemies give them a fair fight and produce facts against them, and don't say they are made by crossing when it is not the case and can be proven by some of the most honorable ladies and gentlemen we have in the fancy, for I will say right here that the two best strains of whites I have were originated by ladies that are an honor to the fancy. I can produce the best of evidence that these animals are the Simon pure, and defy anyone to successfully contradict the same. I had much experience along this line while introducing the beautiful Buff Leghorn to the fanciers of this country. I paid a large sum of money to do so, half of which I never got back and never expect to, while others are reaping the benefit of it. I remember well one particular person who took a stand against me and the breed I was upholding and spoke all manner of evil against me and the Buff Leghorn. He at the time was much interested in Brown Leghorns, but his object was a dishonest one, and soon after he was expelled from the A. P. A., and is today no one cares where. It is dangerous to dig a pit for someone else. I am down on swindlers and frauds as much as anyone, but wish to be sure I am right before I condemn anyone. When I took up the White Belgian I thought I was doing the fancy a favor, and believe so now more than ever.

There is no use for us to get around the fact that we as fanciers must take up the different varieties of hares in order that we may keep up the interests of the fancy. Suppose we were confined to one variety of dogs, cats, poultry and pigeons, what would the fancy amount to? So we say let those that like the reds have them and give those the same rights who want the blacks, silvers, blues or whites. This will make work for our judges and give greater interest to our exhibitions and more benefit will be derived by all.

AUG. D. ARNOLD.

Dillsburg, Pa.

Belgian Hares In the Sunny South.

There has been so much said about the hare that it don't seem that there is anything left to discuss on the subject; still we cranks are like all other fanatics—we never get tired of boring others with stuff that none but a crank would ever think of. To the person who is troubled with gout or that everlasting tired feeling I would advise that he let the hare business alone, for he cannot make much of a success by purchasing his foundation stock and turning the same over to the lot boy, together with a half bushel basket to bring the cash into his sanctum sanctorum. It will oftener be filled to overflowing with dead stock instead; but to the person who has already realized that to get anything in this world worth having you can only obtain it by successive failures, and to keep on trying in spite of everything, such a person will make a success out of most anything he goes at. One must remember that it is the small things that go to make up the large ones in all branches of business. It is even so in the hare business.

One must have a liking for livestock to begin with. That, with the indomitable will power, will do the rest; read all the articles on the subject obtainable, subscribe for several good journals on the industry, read every article, but don't begin to believe all they say. Instead take this information as pointers and reason the difficult subjects out as you would a mathematical problem. If you are not willing to do this your career as a hare breeder will be limited. If one was to undertake to apply all of the remedies to an ailing hare that he will find the different Mr. So and Sos cured theirs with you will have it blowed up like a balloon in a short time.

We will have to admit that the nearest approach to nature's plan is the one to follow in raising stock of any kind—you can't overfeed a hare if it has enough exercise, and that cannot be obtained in a 2x4 inclosure. Give them space enough that sufficient green stuff will grow to accommodate the number one wishes to keep, and you will have but little trouble with the many ills kin to the hare. Place a hare in a small box out in the rain, unprotected, and it is only a question of a little time until you will have to have some more foundation stock, but turn the same hare loose in a large lot with dry quarters that he can go to as he wishes and you will often find him out in the rain through preference, but you need not worry about that; he will take care of himself without any of your assistance and you won't be bothered with snuffles, pot belly, slobbers or anything else.

One has something to do to prepare his stock for this. In the first place the average breeder tries to see how small a space he can keep the most hares; that he can advertise "economy in room for Belgian hares." Well, if you have purchased this kind of stock for foundation you will find that a good many of them cannot stand so sudden a change. It is better for their owner to acclimate two of the litter of eight to the plenty-of-exercise plan than to have the entire eight raised on the hot-house plan. He will eventually have a strong and hardy strain that will require a good stiff club well and vigorously applied to feaze them, and if that is not what one is after in breeding stock of any kind what is it? I have had a good deal more experience in the business than I ever expect to tell any one (and I guess most of the breeders are in the same boat if they would own up to the truth), but I will say that I have learned several things that will ever after be of inestimable value to me. If to-day I could show in one lot of mature age the number of hares that have littered for me and the number I thought I ought to have out of the stock I have owned I would hold a corner on the hare market in Wall Street that would place Morgan and his iron and railroad schemes in the shade, but I have long since found out that it is not what we want that does us the most good, but what we get. So I have decided that is all I will take.

I have had the blues pretty badly when going over the week's fatalities to find that the very finest specimens were the most prominent in the graveyard; still there was a certain fascination about the business that would cause me to start out another order for foundation stock, paying a good round price for a fine doe bred to a champion buck. How I would watch for the date of the kindle. She would build the nicest, softest nest, and after taking a peep at it for about a week and still no prize winners deposited therein, I would gently lift her by the nape of the neck and place her with my most famous stud buck, to find in the next pair of seconds that even the supposed mother was fooled. She had her trouble for nothing; she had built her nest just about thirty-five days too soon. Then to bring a litter of eleven from Lord White Stockings! Why couldn't they have been Fashoda's or Sir Stiles or some other cup winners? But we have no doubt all have been along the line, and it takes all of this and much more to prove whether we have the stuff in us to become true fanciers. Out of my first trio I expected to have enough stock in a short time to stock the country south of the Mason and Dixon line, and if I have a single one of the originals and but one of the progeny left I have a thousand. Still I am a fancier and a breeder, and expect to be one as long as the hare is recognizable by the people, and I think I will stay awhile longer then.

For some reason I can't easily give up a notion when it has taken as deep a root in me as the hare business has. When quite a lad I used to catch wild gray squirrels in box traps and reach my bare hand in to catch hold of them (they would usually get the first one), take them out of the trap and choke them loose and put a collar and chain on them and have them tied around the premises like so many dogs, so I guess some of the old boyish love for pets is still in me to this day.

As to the profit side of the business (I have other vocations to live off of), still I don't mind turning a dollar or two out of the hobby to the cash account. In fact, I doubt very seriously if I would have the interest in the hobby that I have if it wasn't for the cash there is in it, as I have gotten to an age that play-things alone get tiresome after awhile; and like all other vocations, there is money in it for some and nothing in it for others. If I mistake not it will be doubtful if there ever will be as much in it as there has been for the year 1900.

There have been a lot of fakers that have unmercifully bled the people and also injured the industry largely, for the majority of the unfortunates who have fallen into their hands soon quit in disgust and have given the business a black eye ever since. I have a great deal of sympathy for these parties, as I have been there a few times myself. I purchased from a concern in Kansas City with a name as long as the moral law a fine 95 pointer (said to be) and the score card did sure enough show only 5 outs. Well, the card was the only 95 points I could find. If the hare would have scored under an honest judge 70 I would agree to eat him, hide, feet and all, and with a little grease I think one could have swallowed him backward.

This syndicate agreed in large type to guarantee all stock as represented. I wrote Mr. Man on arrival that the score card had come, but where was the hare it described? He of course promptly replied that the hare and the card all went together. Now you can bet I was glad he told me, for I would never have guessed it. We haggled over the matter for several letters, and he finally agreed to have it reshipped to the first other sucker in my vicinity. I did not think there was such another one in this whole section so I thought I would be liberal, and I boxed him up and sent him back prepaid, with a little soft letter that I would rather have the little amount I paid for him than the hare. If you ever heard of a person getting a roasting I got it to the queen's taste. He refused to accept the hare that Boston was offering $500 for the number of points that he represented this one to have. His excuse was that Judge —— said so and that the whole world should take his word for it, and if I did not care to take his word for it he would make affidavit to its genuineness. That was consoling, wasn't it? In three or four days I received word through my express agent that the hare was still in the office. I wired very promptly to Mr. Man to please accept this fine buck as a precious gift. The agent also instructed the agent there that if the consignee did not take him to sell him for what he could get; if no sale, give him away; if not that, kill him and throw him in the sewer, and to this date I do not know the fate of the $500 hare for $10. I wrote him and advised him to be ready to quit the business on short notice, as he would soon have his hands full backing up his guarantees.

I will not attempt to say that my advice was acted upon, but I notice that his name did not long appear as manager of this great and only syndicate. I have been daily expecting a visit from him to square old accounts from the tenor of his last letter. I am proud to know from all reports that this class of dealers is getting less. When they are out we then can expect to build up an industry upon its own merits, but never on paper. I have dealt with a number of conscientious gentlemen in this business, and some of the above mentioned that makes one feel all over in spots when one thinks of them.—J. D. Foster, proprietor of Sunny South Rabbitry, Tuscaloosa, Ala., in Field and Fancy.

BANTAMS.

MOUNTAINSIDE LOFTS AND BANTAM Yards, Mahwah, N. J., Havemeyer Bros., Proprietors.—To parties on the lookout for exhibition stock for the coming fall shows in Game and Variety Bantams, we have to announce that, having had a successful season, we are prepared to supply their requirements in either young or old stock and of the kind that can hold their own in the hottest competition. In a recent article from the pen of A. E. Blunck of Johnstown, N. Y., published in the American Fancier, he stated that when showing against stock from Mountain Side, he knew he was "up against the real thing." Enough said. Why buy elsewhere when such an authority tells you where you can get "the real thing?" Our prices are reasonable in accordance with quality. The "real thing" is always cheap. Anything but the "real thing" in Bantams is dear at any price. All inquiries for stock should be addressed to the Manager, JOHN GLASGOW. 14-21

die by being lousy than from any other cause. You can talk about improper care and food, lack of green food and grit, but, when looking for the root of the trouble look for lice, and when you find them look into the merits of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies. Rev H. H. Purrington, Mt. Vernon, Maine, writes: "We all use Death to Lice and find it most satisfactory." The Norton Poultry Yards, Dallas, Texas, writes: "We have been using your Death to Lice for the past four years and it has given entire satisfaction."

have head lice than most poultry keepers realize. Some think that these little pests are pin feathers on the top of a chicks' head and do not take the trouble to examine them closely until the broods begin to die off. One Massachusetts fancier says that it cost him hundreds of dollars to learn this. Death to Lice Ointment is made especially for the extermination of these little blood suckers, without injury to the little chicks. 100 doses 10c postpaid.

MORE CHICKENS

than should go into two coops are often crowded into one. The lice will then crowd into these small quarters and assist to make the nights long, hot and miserable. The little mites or spider lice crawl out of the cracks and crevices and extract more blood from the chicks than they can make during the day. Charles L. Evans, Wood River, Neb., writes: "I have given your 'special' a thorough trial. I had a henhouse that was polluted with mites. I mixed one (four) ounce box of special to one gallon of whitewash and gave it a thorough whitewashing. I now defy anyone to find a louse about my hen house."

MORE CHICKENS

properly cared for mean more money. Proper care means a liberal use of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies as well as suitable food and housing. No poultry keeper ever failed because he put too much money into Death to Lice. Many do fail because they do not keep their flocks free from vermin. The most successful money-making poulterers are those who use the most Lamberts. We have remedies for all kinds of lice, on anything and everything. We put it up in all sizes of packages to suit all kinds of people. We have all kinds of good testimonials as to its efficacy.

PRICE LIST.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

FLEMISH GIANTS....

The Coming Boom

There can be no question, these Rabbits are speedily to be as popular in America as Hares have been and we have consequently placed ourselves on the ground floor by securing the command of the finest possible stocks ready for shipment to Ameriea, and already some consignments have been dispatched. Those who buy at once will be able to breed ready for the boom. Vide Hare adv. in previous issues.

Gold A VIRGIN GOLD MINE Gold

is that owned by the

GOLDEN TREE

MINING AND MILLING CO.

IN THE HEART OF THE KITCHIKAN DISTRICT OF SOUTH EASTERN ALASKA, WHICH IS THE RICHEST GOLD BEARING PART OF THE WORLD.

It is located on the estuary known as "Thorn Arm" 600 miles north of Seattle and south of Dyea and Skagway, and has great natural advantages, being surrounded by the warm waters of the Japanese current. Like the Gulf Stream the water never freezes, modifying the temperature so that the mine can be worked the year round. The property is at tidewater and the ore can be carried to the smelters at light expense.

The entire property of the Golden Tree Mining and Milling Company is underlaid with the

RICHEST GOLD-BEARING QUARTZ,

which ledge ore now ASSAYS OVER $100 PER TON and gives promise of two to three times that amount.

The Golden Tree Mines are in the same contact and a short distance from the famous Sea Level Mine, recently capitalized for a large sum, and all its stock was sold in New York City. The Sea Level Mine is putting out enormous quantities of rich ore.

The Golden Tree Mines are far richer and show better prospects than the Sea Level ever did until it was developed.

Immediately surrounding the Golden Tree Mines are a number of other exceedingly profitable mines, such as the Gold Standard, Sea Breeze, Gold Coin, Gold Mountain, Sea Level, Gold Hill, Bragdon, Sutton and others.

The same rich vein of free gold, sulphides and tellurides runs under ALL this section of contiguous property. THIS IS NO EXAGGERATION OR DREAM, for results have been realized from all of these mines by actual work and development.

The stock of these companies, which sold a short time ago for a few cents a share, is now steadily bought by the knowing ones at par or more.

The Golden Tree Mining and Milling Company, capitalized for $2,000,000, at $25 per share, all fully paid up and non-assessable, and the directors have decided to offer to the public a limited amount of the Treasury Stock—8,000 shares at 25 cents on the dollar, viz., $6.25 per share net cash.

The Treasury stock is sold for the express purpose of putting in additional stamping and other machinery for the further development of the mines.

As soon as the money procured from this sale of stock is invested in crushers and other machinery, which it will be inside of six months, every share of this stock will be worth par.

It will easily pay an annual dividend of more than 10 per cent on its par value, or 40 per cent on the investment.

Fidelty in the management of the property is assured by the fact that Hon. John R. Rogers, Governor of the State of Washington, is the president of the company, and Hon. John H. Reevis, a Justice of the Supreme Court, is its vice-president.

This is a rare chance to make a safe and profitable investment which is inviting to the large and small investor alike. Orders of any size are acceptable.

In order that investors may be fully protected, the officers of the company have employed the firm of Gardenhire & Vandivert of New York City, as counsel. This is itself a guarantee for this well-known firm would not permit itself to even constructively indorse a proposition which it had not investigated and upon whose officials it could not rely.

Orders will receive prompt attention. Address

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION LABEL FULTON COUNTY No. 256

SATURDAY AUGUST 17 1901

From the Editor's Perch.

We take pleasure in reprinting the editorial comments of Commercial Poultry on shipping eggs. It is refreshing to read such facts, and the lessons taught by them should make a deep impression on the shippers. Such articles are of value to practical poultry raisers, and should be duplicated not only in other practical poultry journals, but in agricultural publications as well.

Now, if Commercial Poultry will just give the facts regarding the shipping of live and dressed poultry to the markets it will open up a new avenue for the improvement in the methods now prevailing. Some of the latter, as far as live poultry are concerned, are disgraceful, unprofitable and cruel.

The following item from the Pet Stock Tribune has been copied by numerous poultry papers in this country:

"The five largest poultry shows of the past show season were as follows: Philadelphia, with 7,859 entries; Crystal Palace, London, 3,196; Boston, 3,360; Chicago, 3,572; New York, 1,629. The Philadelphia show was the largest ever held in America. At this show 378 entries were in the American class. At London the American class contained 710 entries, the largest class in any of the five great shows. The American class consists of Barred, White and Buff Plymouth Rocks, Golden, Silver Laced, White, Buff and Partridge Wyandottes, and White, Black and Mottled Javas. The American class seems to be more popular abroad than at home."

The rank absurdity of the above is apparent when the 378 entries in the American class at the Philadelphia show leaves the balance of the classes with an entry of 7,481 birds! Whoever "worked" the Pet Stock Tribune with such a yarn is entitled to a very thick-hided leather medal for being the champion liar in America.

The largest exhibits at Philadelphia were in the American classes, and to say that they represented one-fifth of the poultry entries is generous. The following from our official report of the show in question will further put a quietus to such wild assertions: "From a fancier's standpoint the show was a success in the leading classes, but there was an absence of birds in many classes and in pigeons that leads us to think the policy of encouraging heavy entries in popular varieties is not conducive to the best results. We were woefully disappointed in the Bantam classes by the paucity of the number of entries, and the same might be said of many other of the older varieties."

Furthermore, there is not a building in the United States that is large enough to hold seven thousand birds cooped as they are at Philadelphia, Boston and New York. New York limits its entries in order to avoid double tiering and retain sufficient floor space. Boston, with a building covering much more floor space than New York, adheres to single cooping of birds, and draws the largest number of entries, when the collections and pens are added, of any show in this country. Philadelphia was seriously handicapped last year by having a very small hall for such a large show, and the limit on single entries and pens would be 2,000 birds. But the great Exposition building secured for the coming Philadelphia show will have unusually large floor space and single cooping and tiering will be in order, and a very large show can be expected.

This leads us to draw attention to the claims of some of our big fall shows, where five, six and even seven thousand entries are reported. A careful count at these shows will reveal an entry seldom exceeding twenty-five hundred birds in the poultry classes.

It has always been a mystery to us why managers of poultry shows always want the quantity and seemingly overlook the quality. There is no warmer show in America than the one held in Johnstown, N. Y. It is a fanciers' show. The entry fee is large, and although the prizes are liberal, the real merit of the show lies in the fact that the best fanciers "try out" their birds at this show. Ask any of the big exhibitors at New York, Boston or Philadelphia what they think of Johnstown as a show place and the answer is invariably the same. It is the quality and the competition this show is after, and it gets it. Even at that there are from 850 to 1,000 birds in the show every year, and in the standard varieties only. The above are cold blooded facts.

Mr. Homer Davenport, of East Orange, N. J., who has the largest collection of the Pheasant family in the world, writes: "The article you are now running, 'Fancy Pheasants and Their Allies,' by Mr. F. Finn, of London, is the ablest article of the kind I have ever seen. Mr. Finn's description shows that he has been a close observer. I am reading it with more than interest." This is the highest praise possible, and both Mr. Finn and the Feathered World are entitled to the thanks of all Pheasant fanciers for this excellent series of articles.

The premium list of the Dutchess County Agricultural Society just published is a model one in every way. Not only is it typographically excellent, but the arrangement and classification in the different departments are unusually complete and practical. The poultry department is, of course, in charge of the veteran T. C. Van Wyck, and that is "nuff sed." "Van" is very popular with exhibitors, and this is due to his absolute squareness, tireless energy and courteous treatment.

We are indebted to Mr. R. J. Ruliffson for the following item of news clipped from the Rochester Union and Advertiser of August 10th:

"Under the auspices of the Associated Poultry Fanciers of Germany and Austria, an imposing monument has just been erected at Gorlitz, Germany, to the memory of Robert Oettel, who is known as the father of poultry breeding in Germany and Austria. Oettel was born in 1798 and died in 1884. He devoted fifty years of his life to the improvement of the breed of poultry in Germany and Austria, and organized societies of poultry fanciers with an aggregate of more than 3,000 members. He printed a poultry journal, and was acknowledged all over Europe as the foremost expert on all poultry questions. By his own efforts Oettel made the town of Gorlitz the center of the fine poultry breeding industry in Europe and each year the members of his associations sold more than 70,000 eggs for breeding purposes from blooded stock."

Germany in the past two years has imported from this country quite a large number of thoroughbred fowls, notably White Wyandottes, and promises to be a steady buyer in the future of popular American breeds. The Leghorn fowl once a great favorite with the Germans is evidently being supplanted in many sections by the Wyandotte and Plymouth Rock.

Mr. A. G. Gilbert, manager of Poultry Department Dominion Experimental Farm, Ottawa, Canada, in the Canadian Poultry Review writes:

"A poultry paper in the United States strongly advocates the hatching of late chickens. In the hands of skilled breeders such a course is, no doubt, frequently practiced and followed by good results. But our farmers should not indulge in similar practice, for they have neither the experience nor suitable accommodation to keep the youngsters growing all winter. What our farmers should aim at is the winter production of eggs, when prices are high, and the hatching out of early chickens in as great number as possible, so as to get the high price for the early bird. And, by the way, it is not out of place at this time to remark that much may be advised, and with possibility of success, by poultry papers published in a zone of comparatively mild winters that would not be easy of accomplishment here."

The above is sound practical advice that is applicable not only in Canada but in the northern sections of the United States.

The best results obtainable in this section as far as fancy fowls are concerned, are from late spring hatched chickens, and we believe the same applies to many parts of New England. There is no let up in the growing season here i. e. from May to November. But March and April chicks are at a disadvantage in being housed or confined in sheds. They seem to lack the "jump" and later on the "finish" of the chicken that gets out on terra firma and hustles in the dewy mornings of May and June, and this season especially, the young crop is looking fine, thanks to splendid pasture and abundance of animal food.

The production however of "baby broilers" and "baby turkeys" is an artificial pursuit and conducted in the north under shelter and at seasons of the year when high prices for these delicacies rule. A "baby" broiler or turkey on toast is rather an expensive luxury, but it pays the producer well who is fortunate enough to get a fancy market for these little tid-bits.

John Glasgow writes us that he is not only willing and ready to put his five dollars for the White Game Bantam sweepstakes at the coming Johnstown show, in which Fred. Maunder, "Ben" Thornton and A. E. Blunck are to have entries, but he will put up five dollars for a sweepstake on B. B. Red Game Bantams at the same show, open to all.

John L. Cost writes us that the premium lists of the Hagerstown show are now ready for distribution and that a copy has been mailed to all the old exhibitors. He will be pleased to mail copies to all new exhibitors who sent their names and addresses. He further informs us that E. L. Barclay of Washington, D. C., has been appointed superintendent of the pigeon flying races.

Mr. Charles R. Crowe returned home to Guelph, Ont., last week, from a trip to England. Mr. Crowe visited the yards of Messrs. Stretch, Entwisle, Bothway and Ainscough, and saw some grand specimens in Game and Game Bantams. He brought with him one pair each of Brown Red and Black Red Game, also some fine birds in Black Red and Pile Game Bantams. He should make a good showing at the shows this season, as we understand there are several Crystal Palace and Birmingham winners in the importation.

Toronto, Canada.

Editor American Fancier: I wish to remind our American cousins that the Industrial Exhibition at Toronto opens on August 26th. From appearances the entry this year is a record breaker in all classes, including horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, poultry, pigeons, pet stock and dogs. All live stock is on exhibition from the commencement of the show until the end, with the exception of the poultry department, which opens on August 29th until September 6th, so that visitors can see the whole of the exhibit any day or days they wish.

As superintendent of the poultry department, I would state that at least the entry this year will exceed 8,500 birds all told. This exhibit alone is worth coming hundreds of miles to see. We have entries coming from all the neighboring states, which, added to our own Canadian exhibit, will make Toronto's annual exhibition the largest of its kind in America today. Come one, come all, and have a good time while here. We aim high, viz., to make everybody feel perfectly at home during their visit.

The Great Columbus Show.

Editor American Fancier: The Columbus Fanciers' Association, of which the following well known breeders are the officers—J. C. Underwood, president; H. P. Maughlin, vice-president; F. A. Brigel, secretary, and E. R. Dunn, treasurer—will hold the great Columbus show, at Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 26th to January 2nd, in the Columbus Auditorium, which is the largest and finest hall in the State of Ohio, having more than 25,000 feet of floor space, not including galleries, &c. Here will be brought together the largest and finest display of standard bred poultry ever seen in Ohio. The members and officers are all up-to-date practical breeders and experienced in the management of a large and successful exhibition. No up-to-date breeder in Ohio or the Mid-West can afford to stay away from this great show. Columbus has always had the reputation of being the best show in Ohio for exhibitors to make sales. This should be taken into consideration when you can come to the great Columbus show for one-half rate railroad fare, which all railroads will allow during the holidays, and with the large amount the association has appropriated to advertise the Columbus show will make it the largest attended poultry show in the Mid-West. Delegations of breeders from all sections will come to Columbus to buy fine birds. So bring along your best birds, win prizes, let the public know who has the best, sell your surplus stock, and have a good time.

Facts about Shipping Eggs.

[Editorial Comments of Commercial Poultry.]

In Commercial Poultry for July 5 we published an article giving some particulars about the losses sustained by producers, country dealers and others because of carelessness in handling eggs. The weather that we have had since the beginning of July emphasizes the importance of the matter treated of in the article. Thousands of dollars have been lost in the loss of eggs within the last four weeks because of careless handling. The Chicago market is flooded with eggs that are disposed of at from 50 cents to $1.50 per case of thirty dozen. This terrific loss has fallen first on the merchant who bought the eggs from the producers and secondly on the producers themselves, for with such a shrinkage to make up for the merchants are going to pay smaller prices, as they cannot afford to stand these losses.

As an example of what happens to a case of eggs during such weather as we have been having, we will give a history of two consignments that reached a large dealer in this city recently. These eggs in both cases came from towns in Iowa, a state which has a first-class reputation for furnishing good eggs and poultry. The reports are taken direct from the documents in the case and are not exceptional in any way. We were shown a pile of such reports, which were made by the candlers who inspected the eggs, and from these took almost at random the two which we reproduce.

The first report is of a consignment of regularly packed and properly handled eggs, which upon being candled showed the following results: No. 1, 7,401 dozen; seconds, 745 dozen; cracks, 296 dozen; rots, 881 dozen. These eggs would have been worth at Chicago market prices, say, 13 cents a dozen if they had been as good as No. 1. There was a total loss of 881 dozen, worth $114.53. On the seconds and cracks there was a loss of 8 cents a dozen. Of these there were 745 dozen of seconds and 296 dozen of cracks, equal to 1,041 dozen, a loss of $83 28, or a total loss on the whole consignment of $198 71. This loss was not due to the merchant, the transportation companies, nor to any other persons or parties except those who gathered the eggs on the farms of the country. If the eggs had been regularly gathered, kept in a cool place and sold as soon as three days from the time they were gathered, would have reached Chicago without loss except as to the cracks, which were broken during the journey from the merchant to the candler. Altogether proper handling of these eggs on the Iowa farms that produced them would have saved a loss of $175.03, approximately, all of which will in the end fall on the producer.

The next report we picked up was of a consignment which had not been properly handled. A merchant in Iowa bought them for a Chicago firm that deals largely in eggs with the understanding that he was to get a certain price for them "at mark." When they were ready to ship he wired that he was offered a little above the agreed price and the house answered that they did not care to advance their price. The merchant shipped them to a commission house in Chicago and upon arrival they were refused. The merchant then wired the firm that was to get them originally to take them and handle them on his account. This firm did this, with the following result, as shown by the candler's report: 1,590 dozen, No. 1; 1,639 dozen, seconds; 325 dozen, cracks, and 1,594 dozen, total loss. This consignment would have been worth in the Chicago market $684 04 if it had reached the candlers in No. 1 condition. As it was it was worth only $391.68, showing a loss of $292.36, due, with the exception of the loss of $16.25 on the cracks, to improper handling. The loss in this case was about equally due to careless handling on the farm and the lack of judgment on the part of the merchant who held them too long, then shipped them in bad shape. After reaching Chicago they lay uncared for in a commission house until the firm that finally handled them got them. The merchant realized from this consignment only $1.59 for each case of thirty dozen, or but a fraction over 5 cents a dozen.

We frequently have complaints that shippers do not get justice when they send eggs to market. To satisfy ourselves we got the above reports from the private papers of a reliable firm, who did not know what use we were going to make of them. Afterward we went through the candling rooms and watched the candlers at their work for a long time and saw for ourselves what came out of the cases just as they were shipped in from the country. Anyone who will do this and then make some easy computations based on the number of eggs that are sent to Chicago alone will begin to have some conception of the vast sum it costs the egg producers of this country to handle the eggs they produce as they do.

At this time the price of eggs in Chicago is several cents below what it would be if consumers could be assured the eggs they buy were all right. As it is, consumers are calling for cold storage eggs because they know the eggs that are shipped in are in such bad condition that they will not get six good eggs from a dozen unless they have been re-candled, and even that precaution does not give confidence, and the storage eggs are bought in preference to those just from the country.

Reform in this matter is not going to be a matter of presenting an array of figures showing what the losses really are, even though such a showing is a very convincing argument. We must look for reform to a general dissemination of information on the subject of properly handling eggs from the time they are laid until they reach the kitchens of the families that use them. One source of loss is unavoidable. The cracks will always be with us, for it will be impossible to teach railway employes that eggs are fragile and they will continue to toss them from hand to hand and occasionally drop a few cases, but this is an inconsiderable loss. The preventable losses are by far the largest item, and these could be avoided by taking very little trouble.

It is perfectly safe to say that any poultry grower who makes a reputation for selling good, sound eggs that are perfectly fresh will have no trouble in getting above the market price for his product, no matter where he lives. The country merchant who knows that certain of his customers bring him eggs that he can sell at mark for the top price of the market will pay a better price for them. It is to his interest to do so, for he can make money by it. If he will not do this, the producer can send them to market as well as the merchant, and by doing this get paid for his carefulness.

It may be objected that very few breeders have enough eggs to fill a case often enough to get them to market in good condition. While this may be true, we see no reason why the people of a neighborhood could not club together and sell their eggs, dividing the proceeds according to the number each one may furnish. As this is written No. 1 eggs are worth 13½ cents in the market, and yet Missouri eggs are selling as low as 50 cents a case of thirty dozen, because they are heated, shrunken, spotted or rotten. The weather has much to do with this, but careful handling would circumvent the weather conditions almost entirely.

Charleston, S. C., Invites the American Poultry Association.

The management of the poultry show to be held January 23d to 31st, 1902, in connection with the South Carolina Inter-State and West Indian Exposition, at Charleston, S C., have extended a very earnest and cordial invitation to the American Poultry Association to hold their annual meeting in connection with this exposition. If the A. P. A. ever wish to extend their influence through the Southern states, there will certainly be no more favorable opportunity than this one for many years, and the hospitality and many attractions of old Charleston are so well known, that apart from all business considerations there can be no more attractive place to visit, especially at this time of the year. All over the South, the interests in all Standard breeds of poultry are increasing rapidly and have in fact arrived at a stage and magnitude at which all the breeders feel the need of better organization. Only one meeting has been held in the South by this Association and that some ten years ago, and unfortunately under rather unfavorable circumstances as compared with the present opportunity.

There will, of course, be very low excursion rates from all points, and from the wide spread interest already shown in this poultry exhibit, it is expected to be able to get together in the large auditorium the greatest collection of poultrymen ever held in the South. Should the A. P. A. select this exposition for their annual meeting, the management of the poultry show will also work up a general congress of Southern poultrymen which will be held immediately before or after the meeting of the A. P. A., and in which the latter will be invited to take part and meet with the other poultry associations in the South.

There is no doubt that the A. P. A. will have no better chance than is now offered to them of getting in touch with the Southern poultry breeders, and at the same time extend their membership through the Southern states and thereby become in the fullest sense of the word a "national" association.

The Philadelphia Show.

Editor American Fancier: The Keystone Association is making gigantic efforts towards having one of the largest shows ever held in America. At the present time, of the 10,800 square feet of space which we set aside in the absolute centre of the building for the incubator, brooder and supply people in general, 8,000 square feet have already been taken, and if any of our friends whom we have not yet heard from may be contemplating making exhibits at Philadelphia they should communicate with me without delay, so that I may be able to make every arrangement possible to take care of all our exhibiting friends, and for anyone possessing novelties which they desire to exhibit we have available a few display cages, 4 by 10 ft.

Our cash specials, even at this early date in the season—first of August—have reached the large amount of $1,000 or over, and I hope by the time of the closing of the premium list to have the largest cash offerings ever offered by any association.

Our judges have been selected with great care. We are still one or two short, but the following have been selected to date: Chester E. Howell, H. S. Ball, J. F. Crangle, C. F. A. Smith, D. J. Lambert, T. F. McGrew, William J. Stanton, A. A. Parker, George H. Northup, A. C. Smith, Geo. O. Brown.

The pigeon judges are being selected by a special committee of pigeon fanciers, and I hope within a day or two to furnish you with a complete list of these judges.

The interest in our cat department is meeting with great success, and a number of specialty clubs, which I will announce later, will be with us, and the Philadelphia management will leave no stone unturned to make the fanciers' sojourn in Philadelphia both a pleasant and profitable one.

Pennsylvania State Show at Harrisburg.

Editor American Fancier: We are making preparations for our second annual show to be held at Harrisburg, Pa., January 21st to 25th inclusive, 1902. The Pennsylvania State Poultry Society will hold their annual session during the week of the show. We will do everything possible to enthuse the poultry industry through Central Pennsylvania and expect to coop twice as many birds as last season. J. H. Drevenstedt has been engaged to judge the poultry. Now is the time for the fanciers of Pennsylvania to avail themselves of a rare opportunity to show to those interested in the poultry industry, the advantages in being members of the state and county associations.

Migratory Wild Birds' Eggs.

It will surprise many people to know that some of the most important migratory birds are now in process of extinction because of man's cupidity, not in killing them, but in destroying their eggs, and thus preventing their existence. All of them breed in the Arctic regions, where in summer there is the greatest abundance of insect and fish life on which to support themselves. Man has found these breeding places, and so long as he can secure fresh eggs he finds ready sale for them at profitable prices from photographers, who use the albumen for making the films on which their pictures are taken. It is true, if there were not this supply, photographs might be dearer than they now are; but if this use of their eggs means the extinction of many migratory species of birds such use of them ought to be prohibited by law.

DEVELOPMENT work has been in progress for six years, and more than ten thousand feet of shafts, drifts levels and cuts have been completed and paid for.

Upwards of fifteen million tons of ore are now ready for the mill, all of which will be mined by open cuts at a nominal cost.

A CONTRACT has been entered into for the erection of a mill and cyanide plant capable of handling 1,000 tons of ore daily, which will be completed this year. The Directors guarantee that this plant will be placed in operation, regardless of the amount of treasury stock subscribed. The net profit after commencing work will exceed $60,000 a month, and probably reach $100,000 a month within a year. The ore in sight will supply such a plant for more than forty years, assuring an annual return of 20 per cent or more on the investment.

There is no promotion stock. No salaries to officers. Every dollar realized from the sale of stock, goes into the treasury to pay for the plant. Reports of J. Ralston Bell, London; William A. THE INDIAN CRIMSON TRAGOPAN.

The male of this species differs from the rest in having the face thinly covered with small black feathers; the neck and lower plumage are rich red, and the body generally is sprinkled with round white spots edged with black, which, on the underparts especially, make a beautiful contrast. The loose skin of the throat is deep rich blue, but the bib when expanded is orange or salmon-colored, with blue bars at the sides. The light portions of the hen's plumage are cinnamon and buff, making the general hue a rich mossed brown. This Tragopan inhabits the higher wooded ranges of the Central and Eastern Himalayas, breeding not far below the snows. Many, I regret to say, are killed for their skins; it is more satisfactory to note that many have also been sent to Europe, so that the bird is now no rarity. In its native haunts it is very seldom seen, as it keeps close to cover, and in captivity this habit should be studied as also their predilection for green shoots, fruit, bulbs, etc.

Although well known from being an Indian bird, this species is not so familiar in captivity as the other Crimson Tragopan, which has been successfully bred in the London Zoological Gardens.

THE CHINESE CRIMSON TRAGOPAN.

This species bears a strong general resemblance to the Indian bird, but the cock is distinguished by having the blue skin of the face bare, and the bib, when expanded, rich blue with scarlet bars at the sides. The cock's plumage is less showy than that of his ally, the spots being larger, less well-defined, not black-edged as a rule, and pale grey instead of white. I can give no criterion for distinguishing the hens.

The home of this species is southwest and central China, and it has done very well in captivity in Europe. The male is stated to be very free with his display in the spring, and I well remember my delight at witnessing it in the London Zoo—the sudden appearance of the brilliant bib is most striking, and the colors are extraordinarily rich.

The other Tragopans are, as above stated, not at all well known, but the group is so beautiful, and so well adapted for captivity or even for showing, that it is worth while to mention them. The Black or Western Tragopan inhabits the Western Himalayas. The male shows little red except on the neck, and the white spots with which his plumage is adorned are so broadly surrounded by black that a general dark tone is given to the ground color; his bib is purple in the middle, flesh-colored at the sides, and spotted and edged with pale blue. The hen's plumage is much greyer in tone than that of the Crimson Tragopan hens. The Grey Breasted or Blyth's Tragopan, which I have seen at the London Zoo, comes from Assam. The cock is readily recognized by his grey under-parts below the red neck, without spots, and his orange face and throat passing into green below. The hen is blacker above and less buff below than the Red Tragopan females. Finally, Cabot's, or the Buff Tragopan from southeastern China, is entirely buff below and very heavily spotted with that color above. His bib is red in the centre, pink and blue at the sides. The hen is said to resemble those of the crimson species.

Although not quite so uniform in structure as the Tragopans, which practically only differ in color and, to a much less extent, in size, the Monauls form a very uniform and easily recognizable type. Only four species are known, and only one of these is at all familiar in captivity.

THE COMMON MONAUL OR IMPEYAN PHEASANT.

The Monaul is a heavily-formed bird, equal to a large fowl in size. The head and bill are large for a bird of this family, especially the latter; there is a bare space round the eye of a bright blue color; the legs are short and powerful, of an olive green or "willow" tint; and the tail is like that of a pigeon, only moderately long, flat and slightly rounded at the end. The plumage is close and hard, and differs much in the two sexes, although they agree in most points of form, and do not differ much in size. The male possesses a pair of short spurs, while the hen is, as usual, spurless; he also has a gracefully arched crest of very narrow feathers broadening out at the tip, while the hen's crest is short and composed of ordinary feathers.

The resplendent beauty of the cock's plumage almost baffles description. His head and a streak down each side of the neck, are bright, burnished green; the back of the neck fiery copper-red of a wonderful lustre, changing into pale greenish gold in some lights; the upper part of the back is golden green; the rest of the upper plumage metallic purple, the feathers tipped with metallic blue. On the lower part of the back, however, there is a patch of silver white, but this is usually hidden by the wings. The lower plumage from throat to tail is velvet black and the tail bright cinnamon, contrasting strikingly with the metallic hues of the rest of the plumage.

The hen's plumage is a close mottling of brown, black and buff, set off by a pure white throat, altogether, she looks like a very big Quail or Partridge. Her characteristic form and the blue skin round the eye at once mark her off distinctly from the hens of other Pheasants.

Young cock Monauls are very much like hens at first, but the white throat is more or less mixed with black. They do not come into full color till the second year; and even then, curiously enough, the seventh flight feather remains brown a year longer.

This bird inhabits the whole of the Himalayas, keeping to high elevations and a temperate or cold climate. In summer it ranges even above the forest level and near the snow line; but in winter it has, of course, to descend lower in search of food. This consists largely of roots and insects, for which it is continually digging with its powerful bill; for, unlike other Pheasants, it is not addicted to scratching. It is not very sociable, though the hens keep together more than the cocks. They lay in May or June, and the eggs are rather like a turkey's. The species is sadly persecuted on account of the demand for the gorgeous plumage of the males, and its numbers have become greatly diminished in consequence. This is the more regretable as it is quite unnecessary. As everyone knows the surplus males in this polygamous family can be killed down with no bad effects on the stock; but the greedy hunter snares all alike, using the hens for food.

Fortunately, the Monaul has been largely exported to Europe, and although at first some difficulty was experienced in rearing it in captivity, this has been got over, and it is now largely bred, at any rate on the Continent. The bird, indeed, possesses a peculiarly tameable disposition; even in a cage it is much steadier than most Pheasants, and Mr. Tegetmeier informs us that he has seen Monauls at the residence of his friend, Mr. J. J. Stone, in the Welsh hills, enjoying full liberty, and as tame as the other poultry. This is the more remarkable, as the Monaul in its wild state is particularly strong on the wing and given to taking long flights. The cock often sails on expanded wings, offering a magnificent spectacle.

In the treatment of the Monaul in captivity regard must be had to its habit of digging, which speedily renders its enclosure rough and unsightly; and particular care should be taken to have the pen well-drained in consequence. The birds should, of course, be allowed to exercise their natural propensity; and particular care should be taken to have the pen well drained in consequence. The birds should, of course, be allowed to exercise their natural propensity; and hence, in consideration of their quiet habits, it will be found as well to clip their wings or pinion them, and give them as large a run as possible instead of confining them in an aviary. Turned loose in a garden after the crops were lifted, their operations would probably be found of great use.

In the treatment of both old and young their taste for grubs and raw vegetable food should always be borne in mind, and plenty of maggots, chopped onions, potatoes, etc., provided, with a full allowance of custard for chicks.

I sincerely hope that the Monaul will be taken up as a real domestic bird, for few present so many good points. Although his form cannot be called graceful, his carriage is upright and dignified, and his glittering splendor puts even the Peacock to shame. Moreover, he is excellent eating and carries a great deal of meat, being of an ideal build for a table bird. Add to this that he has a mellow plaintive call—a very rare attribute in this family—and an unusually good temper, and his list of virtues becomes one that any candidate for domestication might envy.

I had almost forgotten to mention the very striking courting attitude of this bird. This somewhat resembles that of the turkey cock, the head being bent down on the neck, the wings opened, and the tail raised and spread; but the feathers lie close and do not bristle like the turkey's. In this position, with gold, copper, silver and steel all glittering on his plumage, the Monaul minces and even hops about for the edification of his hen, who appears to appreciate his efforts, as she has been seen to call him from his meal apparently only for the purpose of making him display.

Only three other species of Monaul are known, as I remarked above, and I think one of these is very doubtful. This is the Bronze-backed Monaul, which is only known by a few skins of cocks which have been procured in the little State of Chamba, in South Cashmere. In form and size it resembles the common species, but has the lower back greenish bronze instead of white, and the under-surface of the body glossy green instead of black. It seems that the Chamba shikaris or native hunters say that this bird is merely a "sport" from the ordinary kind, and as the Monaul is known to vary in color, like so many Pheasants, I think they are probably right.

The other two species, however, are very distinct; both have been exhibited at the London Zoo, but they are very rare in captivity. One is L'Huys' Monaul from Western Szechuen and Eastern Koko-nor; this is a larger and finer bird than the ordinary species, having more of the red and gold tints in its plumage, and much of the tail glossy purple and green; the crest is of ordinary feathers. The hen has a white back, and is thus easily distinguishable from the common Monaul hen, though the cock shows little white in this part. I well remember seeing this bird in the Zoo years ago.

The last species, Sclater's Monaul, is about the size of the common bird but less handsome, having a rather coarse head with no crest, but instead a covering of short curly metallic purple and green feathers; the white on the rump extends right down to the root of the tail, which is also tipped with white. This part in the hen is cream-color finely pencilled with dark brown, making her readily distinguishable from the hens of the other species.

This bird comes from the hills east and southeast of Sadicja in northeast Assam; the first specimen came from the Mishuir Hills, and was presented to the London Zoo by the late Dr. Jerdon, so well known as a naturalist by his work on Indian birds and beasts. When the natives of these hills can be weaned of their objectionable custom of head-hunting, no doubt this Monaul, and probably other fine birds also, can be expected to become more accessible. Meanwhile I would invite the attention of fanciers who want to rear high class and beautiful birds, but are deterred by a cold and bleak situation, to his commoner and more beautiful rival, which is almost the most brilliant bird in the world.—F. Finn, B. A., F. G. S., in the Feathered World, England.

A Woman's Efforts In Poultry Keeping.

At the beginning of the contest year, March 1st, 1900, I had on hand a nice flock of 163 Barred Plymouth Rock hens and 14 cocks. While they might not score as high as some of those at a poultry show, yet for egg and meat production they have always proved of exceptional value. My way of keeping the flock in the best condition is to occasionally buy or exchange a few cockerels not related to my stock. Most of the feed for the larger fowls is cracked corn, with all the ground oyster shell they will eat, and plenty of fresh water. I put most of the cracked corn in pans, but scatter a little on the ground in places so that all can have a chance to eat. Occasionally I get some fish heads or bones and refuse meat, which is scattered around for the fowls to work at. I seldom give any condition powders, stimulants, etc.

I have two henhouses, one 30 feet long by 12 feet wide, with a shed roof 7 feet high at back and 9 feet in front. There is an alley at the back where I keep the grain and allow the sitting hens to run. The house is divided into two parts by a wire partition. The nests are built under the roost boards and are arranged so that they open at front and back in the alley. When a hen wishes to set, the front door is shut so that the laying hens cannot get to her. The other house is 8x20 feet, with a hip roof.

When a hen wants to set, I clean the nest, put in new hay and then the eggs, which I have previously marked with a red pencil. When a hen has hatched, I remove her and the chicks to a coop by themselves, clean out the nest, disinfect with kerosene and put in fresh hay. I feed the young chicks on meal stirred up with water or skimmilk, also stale bread or broken crackers. I save all scraps from the table and give them. When the chicks are a week or two old, I open the coop and let the old hen run with them. She usually comes back at night, when I close the coop tight to keep out skunks.

During the year I hatched 244 chicks, but lost 95 by hawks, skunks and other causes. I sold 200 broilers and old fowls for $111.15 and finished the year with 117 hens and nine cocks. The cost and value of feed, supplies and labor was $143.40. The eggs sold brought $144.66, making the total receipts $257.81, which left a profit of $114.41.—Mrs. Abby Corey, Connecticut, a successful prize winner in American Agriculturist poultry contest.

Eleven Years With Buff Leghorns.

I have been breeding and showing this variety now eleven years. My first start was with pure white tails and wings. In 1893 I purchased a cockerel that gave me a true start, and since then great improvements have advanced, and there is plenty of chance yet for new improvements. During the eleven years, we have learned much about this valuable breed, and know, by actual experience, we have more to learn yet. The buff color is harder to breed than almost any other color, as the judges in almost all cases have different ideas what said color should be. I have heard breeders recommend to purchase nothing but pure buff birds. We would like to know how many pure buff birds these breeders have seen. It seems to me—I may be wrong—that when we get pure Buff Leghorns, we will have them scoring 94 to 96, as common as the Whites and Blacks. If we are right, then we have not the pure buff we want, or the judges are not giving them their just dues Our opinion is that the judges are giving them about what they are worth—from 90 to 94½, with a chance for us to improve. We have only seen, now and then, a bird honestly worth 94 to 95 in females, and they are as near buff as we believe we have to-day. So, when you are purchasing, do not think you can get the simon pure ones for any small price, in females or cockerels either. How many so-called pure Buff Leghorn cockerels ever proved to be good cocks? We have yet to see one. In most cases the good cocks, when they were cockerels, were chestnut or bronze in tail and wings, and, as cocks, this comes in lighter, which makes a fine buff. We have found, in our breeding, that a cockerel with chestnut or bronze in tail will throw as near pure buff offspring as we have seen. This is no guess work, but fact; also, females with black in tail, mated with a cockerel with buff tail mixed with white, will bring pure buff now and then. Any of these matings will bring you all the white you want, and more than we all want. For a good breeding bird give me a cockerel with chestnut, bronze, or even some black; on good females this will produce a nice lot of show birds. If you can get a pure buff cockerel with strong tail and wings, he is worth his weight in Klondike nuggets. A great deal, in getting good birds is the care, attention and feed. It is one-half the making of a show bird. This labor commences from the time the chick is hatched until it enters the show room. The chicks must have shade, and they can't have too much. We feed good, yellow corn, and plenty of it (would not feed white corn if it was given us), wheat, oats, pumpkins, carrots, buckwheat, sunflower seeds, oil meal, potatoes and cabbage, and the last, plenty of green bone. Six weeks before show season we separate all cockerels from the females and put each show cockerel in small coops and handle them once a day to tame them down, as the Buff Leghorns are high flyers, and when we first put them in the pens for winter and enter the coop, they remind us of little yellow balloons popping up all over.

The Buff Leghorn is not the greatest fowl before the public—there are others just as good—but they are by no means the poorest, either. They are a beautiful breed, full of life and activity. Take a nice pen of them out on the lawn and they are admired by all, as the cockerel resembles "the only pebble on the beach." They are great layers—laying just as many eggs as any Leghorns—and for size they are larger, therefore laying a larger egg.

Last season we raised seventy birds at home, with only six cull cockerels and eight cull pullets. We consider this breeding as good as most of the old Standard breeds, and shows that they are not breeding all culls. They are quick growers, the cockerels crowing at six or seven weeks old, and females begin laying at five and six months, keeping it up all winter if given proper care and a warm place.

We hope that every person interested in this popular breed will join the American Buff Leghorn Club, as it only costs $1, and the benefits are worth five times the cost to the members and the breed. GEORGE S. BARNES.

Literary News.

The sale of thousands of copies of a ten cent magazine at one dollar apiece was a very curious happening at the time of the Chicago World's Fair. The Cosmopolitan prepared a World's Fair number, contributed to by many famous writers, and so thoroughly illustrated that it surpassed even the most expensive book which had up to that time been issued. In those days the magazine was printed from two sets of plates only, and when these were worn out it was impossible, without a great loss of time, to put further editions on the press. The newsdealers, taking advantage of this condition, raised the price of the Cosmopolitan's World's Fair number to one dollar a copy. A few sales were even made toward the close at the phenomenal figure of five dollars. Undoubtedly this happening is unique in the history of magazine literature. The Cosmopolitan will endeavor to repeat its past success, with a Pan American Exposition Number, which will be even more attractive, if possible, than its World's Fair predecessor. The most famous writers of the country have been invited to take part in the preparation of this issue. After many days' careful study of all the wonderful scenes of the Exposition, more than a hundred photographs have been prepared, which, taken as a whole, give a thorough conception of the marvels of this Exposition. It is doubtful if any book, selling at forty times the price of the magazine, will give any description of the fair which will approach in interest and artistic value the September Cosmopolitan. Those who visit the fair will preserve this number as a delightful reference-book in the years to come, and those who are unable to go there will secure such a comprehensive view of its main attractions as will be well worthy of preservation.

The August American Boy (Sprague Publishing Company, Detroit, Mich.) is a beautiful midsummer number. Whittier's poem "The Barefoot Boy," illustrated, occupies the front page. The illustrated stories are: "A Holiday Adventure," "An Engineer's Story," "The Way of the Transgressor," "How Two Grouse Saved Their Home," "How Harry Proved He Was Not a Thief," "The Sequel to a Put-out," "Why Tim Missed the Circus," and chapters XXI and XXII of "Three Boys in the Mountains." Russell Sage, the Wall Street Millionaire, writes on "When the Country Boy Goes to the City"; the third and fourth letters of George Washington Jones, a typical boy; Part Three of Stansbury Norse's Serial "How to Learn Drawing"; "August in American History"; "The Celebrated Boy Choir of St. John's Church, Washington, D. C."; "How Boys Make Money"; "The Boys' Exchange" and "Reviews of Boys' Books" scores of items under "Boys in the Home, Church, School, Office, Store, Factory, on the Farm." "Boys in Games and Sport" and "Boys in the Animal Kingdom" oocupy a page each. "The Order of The American Boy," a non-secret society for American boys. There are one hundred and one illustrations in this number. $1 a year. The Sprague Publishing Co., Detroit, Mich.

PIGEONS.

Pigeon Hints.

In preparing the food, again, a little care must be exercised. Only a little should be prepared at a time, so that it is not kept to get sour and stale or commence to germinate, or internal trouble may be expected. The best plan is to allow the peas to soak in cold water for about six hours for the birds that have reached the last stage of the feeding process, when the grain may be given whole. In the earlier stage a little longer time may be given for soaking, so that they shall become quite soft, and to still further aid the work of digestion they should be partly crushed. A little fine sharp grit should also be administered during the last stage, but this should only be done occasionally and not at every meal. This will greatly aid in the work of digestion, and it will also prevent troubles when the bird begins to pick up for itself. When this has been neglected or even in the case of the birds brought up in the usual way, when a suitable supply of grit has not been provided for the old birds to pick up, it will be found that the young bird exhibits an inordinate craving for this material and will pick up anything of the kind, large or small, that it comes across. Thus it may come to pass that the gizzard may become packed with good-sized stones; when the work of digestion becomes partly or wholly stopped, the bird eats little or nothing and gradually wastes away and dies without showing any signs of ailing beyond the failing in the appetite. Such a case was brought to my notice a few days ago, and the bird, which before had been a big, strong, well-developed youngster, was reduced to a mere skeleton before it finally died, although every remedy had been tried. It was only when a post-mortem examination had been made that the real cause of death was ascertained and the seeming mystery cleared up. What made the case harder to bear was that the youngster was a most promising one, it had never before had a day's illness, and had it lived would undoubtedly have done some winning. In all such cases, and, in fact, whenever no cause can be given for the occurrence, it is always the best plan to have an examination made by an expert in such matters, then the real cause will be found out, and means can be adopted to prevent it happening again. In the case mentioned, had no such steps been taken it might have been inferred that consumption was the cause, that it had been inherited from one of the parents, and this might have led to one or both being discarded as breeders. This inference, as the case proved, would have been altogether wrong, and the young fancier, his mind being set at rest, will go on breeding with the birds, hoping for a better result in the future.

The lesson, however, to be learned from such experience is to see that the young birds are kept out of the reach of unsuitable material and that a good supply of proper grit of the right size is placed well within their reach. The danger will always be present when the floor of the flight is covered with gravel, and not only from the cause stated, but also from their inexperience in mistaking small round stones for grains of corn, which, even of suitable size, would be of little or no use in the work of grinding up the corn. How, then, can the danger be avoided? Simply enough if space is available for building a place for them when they are taken away from the old ones. This need not be a large structure, or if a nursery is in existence a corner may be partitioned off to be used exclusively for the birds so removed from the parents. Here they can be kept until they can discriminate between the corn and useless grit material and have grown sufficiently to hold their own against the more developed young ones. Whenever possible I should always advise the separation of the young birds from the old ones, for if left in the breeding loft they are sure to be roughly handled and pecked about even by their own parents, and more especially when the new nest is hatched out. They will endeavor to get into the nesting place, and in the struggle to turn them out there is the further danger of the newly hatched young ones being trampled upon or turned out of the nestpan to perish miserably. Again, when they attempt to feed they are likely to be driven off and have to put up with the leavings, and the result will be that they do not grow and develop properly, even if they escape injury. On the other hand, when removed to the nursery they will enjoy peace and quietness, and can, if necessary, be more suitably fed than when left in the breeding place.

The nursery should be roomy, so as to allow plenty of fresh air and space for exercise, and if the variety kept can stand the exposure a large wirework flight should be provided for their use. In the case of the more delicately-plumaged varieties some such provision could also be made, but it should be roofed over and otherwise protected against the fierce rays of the sun, or the color will be injured. During the hot weather a bath should be given two or three times a week, and when so provided it should be given in the flight, where the water splashed about will be quickly absorbed or dried up by the heat of the sun. When this is done the plumage will be kept clean and in good condition and it will also help on the moult and the growth of the new coat. Care should be taken, however, that the bath is given in the morning when the sun is out, so that the feathers can be readily dried, and when the bath is done the dirty water should not be allowed to remain for the birds to drink its contents, or roup and such like troubles are likely to arise. The food for the birds in the nursery should be ample, to allow of growth and development, but only enough to be eaten up at once and none left about to become soiled by the droppings or trampled under foot. As a rule, it will be found that two meals a day will be quite sufficient, the first about eight in the morning and the second towards the end of the afternoon. The kind of food given will depend to a great extent upon the size of the variety, but in every case the nitrogenous or body-building grains, such as peas, tares and small tick beans, should largely predominate, while only a small portion of the fat forming grains should form part of the diet. These should consist of wheat or dari, but there is one that I would warn the young fancier against using at this season of the year and that is maize, and more especially when the birds are kept closely confined. It is much too fattening and when used to any extent for such birds a large amount of adipose tissue is formed at the expense of hard solid muscle, while it exposes the bird

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.
NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 130th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

to leg weakness and even to heart troubles. For birds that have full liberty it is sometimes largely used, and with plenty of exercise they seem to assimilate it without any apparent difficulty, but even in their case it cannot be looked upon as anything approaching a perfect staple food during the hot weather, and when used should only be given in small quantities.

Neither is it necessary at this season to give stimulating grain, but I am afraid that the habit is growing, and with the object of forcing on the moult, with the idea of getting the young ones ready for the early shows. Many times have I been asked to recommend such and such grains and pills or other like medicines, but to all I would give the same answer, and that is, let all such stimulants severely alone, except in exceptional cases, such as some cases of illness and stoppage in the moult, but even then only in very small quantities. Instead of such stimulants I should advise the use of some green food, such as lettuce and watercress, which will have a much better effect on the system, and more especially as a blood purifier. Lastly, it must not be forgotten that food of a limy nature is required to help in building up the bony structure and in the renewal of the feathery covering, and this should be supplied in the shape of old mortar and finely crushed oyster shell, while a good lump of salt should be always kept in the nursery. This can be given in the form of rock salt, or, failing this, a piece of the household kind well baked and hard will answer the purpose. In the latter case it is well to see that it is always present, for when the supply has been exhausted for some time and a fresh piece given they are apt to devour it most eagerly and to take more than is good for them, which is rarely the case with the harder kind or rock salt.

Recently I warned the young fancier against neglecting cases of exhaustion and breakdown among the stock birds, and this is still more necessary during very hot and sultry weather. Already I have heard of several such cases, and in one or two instances brain troubles, or what is known as "megrims," have been the result. In many cases this is the result of some injury to the bony covering of the brain, or it may be produced by an effusion of blood owing to the rupture of a blood vessel, or even by the pressure of the blood vessels on the brain substance. To the latter I attribute the cases that have recently cropped up, the chief causes being the heat and overfeeding on rich food stuffs. Such attacks are most serious, for even when relief has been given there is always a tendency towards the disease, and more especially when the patient is getting on in years. With young birds there is always much more chance of a permanent cure, and I can call to mind several instances where the disease never showed itself again. The patient should be kept in perfect quiet, in a darkened and cool place, and fed on soft and easily digested food. Bleeding will sometimes give relief, and a little cooling saline medicine will also have a good effect, but stimulants should be avoided altogether.—W. Fellowes in Feathered World, Eng.

Belgian Hares In the Sunny South.

I am frequently asked for my plan of rabbitry, so perhaps some might care to hear of it. It is in shed form, fronting east, north and south ends as well as the west side closed in, the roof at the back side is five feet from the ground and seven feet in front; the roof's comb is at a point over the front of runs with roof extending four feet over a walk or hallway, which extends the full length of the house. The stalls are two feet wide and eight feet long, with the proverbial cracker box for the nest at the back end, which sets three inches in the ground below the wire netting bottom (which extends under all of the stalls), and the three inches of dirt on top of the netting makes the box six inches in the ground, which makes it cool in the summer and warm in the winter. The house is ditched on all sides, so there is no trouble of water seaping in; the front of stalls entire is a door of a light frame covered with wire. All partitions between stalls are wire. There is a ventilator close up under the eaves on the west side running full length of the house, protected by a wire covering in the summer, with a hinged end planed to cover over it in the winter. There is also a heavy duck curtain on the front or east side, which can be raised or lowered according to the season.

I also found that in this hot weather we have been having that the single roof did not afford enough protection, so an extra one was added with an air space of twelve inches between the two, leaving an opening at the comb to allow a free circulation, which has proven a big success. Even with all of this extra precaution I have lost some very fine stock, which were apparently overcome with the heat, the same as people are. This is my breeding quarter; also stud bucks are kept in this house to be handy. The young are kept with the mother here until about six weeks old; they are then placed in a lot (after being ear tagged, which goes on record together with the sire's and dam's names) until they are about three months old. Then the sexes are separated and transferred to the sales lots, which are about fifty feet square, with comfortable dry quarters to go to as they see fit. They are also fed and watered in this house. So practically speaking, they are reared out of doors, where they can take the elements as they see fit. In lots of this size (I would have even larger if I had the room to spare) there will be no fighting of consequence, and here is the place to cure and prevent the potbelly and most all of the other diseases. I have had as many as fifty bucks at one time in this lot, ranging from three months to mature age, and they get along as peaceably as kittens. Neither bucks nor does in large lots will interfere with young stock as it is added from time to time. This is the case if the bucks have not been bred, but if you want to see the fur fly just drop an old buck in with these unbred fellows and they will surely make it hot for him. He won't have much time to fight back, as the whole crowd is on him in a jiffy. Bucks can be kept together indefinitely so long as they are not used in service. Put any two of them in a small space and trouble begins at once, and it is no little scrap either. One or both will be totally ruined if left alone.

I also tried the studs in active service in the large lot, but soon found that would not work. Two old stagers will soon castrate each other. Neither will it do to have all the brood does together. I gave them access to a large lot where they could go at will from their stall. They soon got over the scrapping period and would be found at times all in one hutch apparently visiting, as contented as could be, but the trouble I found was they could not read figures—mistaking some other stall for their own. I have found two or three does nursing the same litter. They did not seem to know the difference, so that forced me to put a stop to the privilege character business. I regretted this ever so much, as I wanted to establish a strain raised altogether out of doors, so to speak, but they go there now as soon as taken from the doe.

I presume all of the breeders will agree with me that the worst of all troubles is colds, which if allowed to run means snuffles, if pneumonia does not get them first. The latter disease I have never yet had one to get over a case of. The former I don't know, but it would be better to kill the specimen when you are sure it has a set case. There is a cure for it, I am satisfied, but the time and patience it takes to complete it is hardly worth the hare. I have tried about all the remedies I have heard of, and the one so far that has given the best results is a preparation put up by a New York firm I have made some permanent cures where the case was not of too old standing (I have heard that cases of a year's standing have been cured). The best results I have had was to use it as a preventive; also when the first symptoms appear, usually two or three days does the work. Another very important feature is to keep the quarters well cleaned and disinfected. I like dry sawdust about the best to sprinkle over the floor.

Where your hares are kept in a lot without the wire bottom and they are doing more burrowing than you like, nothing so discourages them as to fill up the hole with bricks or stone, but be sure that none are in the den. I also accidentally stumbled on a remedy for slobbers that might do others some good, which is no more than carbolated vaseline. No doubt any other grease would do as well. I was trying the alum and salt remedy to no purpose, and the little cuss was losing the hair under his lower jaw, and to bring it out again I used this vaseline, as it was handy. The first application helped the slobbers so much that I applied it the second and third time, which completed the cure. Now that is all I use and the second application usually stops it and also keeps the hair from coming off. Another thing I find a good cure for boils or tumors that frequently come under the skin is to make rather a large incision in them after they get ripe and squeeze all the pus out; then take peroxide of hydrogen in a small, hard rubber syringe and inject into the sac, working the point or nozzle of same all around the crevices of the sac until all of the pus has been dislodged and the peroxide runs out clear, and about this time you will notice where you made the incision that it is red and healthy looking. That is a good sign that the work is well done. In the majority of cases this is the last trouble you will have with this especial tumor.

7 EXCHANGE PLACE,
Room Fifteen, Boston, Massachusetts.

HAMILTON MICKLE, GENERAL AGENT, FORT PLAIN, N. Y.

As to feed, most any old weed will do if they like it, which can be fed in abundance, providing they have plenty of room for exercise, otherwise I would feed sparingly. I keep alfalfa hay in the rack at all times, but feed the grain according to the condition of the animal, preferring corn meal and wheat bran for breakfast, equal parts, mixed rather dry, and feed what they will eat up clean in, say a couple of hours, nothing for dinner except their hay, which they can get at all times. For supper a small handful of oats (the best I can get) down to a tablespoonful for each animal, and if they are still getting too fat cut off the oats entirely for a while. If I am not criticised too severely on this, I may get up courage to add another chapter at some future time.—J. D. Foster in Field and Fancy.

MOUNTAINSIDE LOFTS AND BANTAM Yards, Mahwah, N. J., Havemeyer Bros., Proprietors.—To parties on the lookout for exhibition stock for the coming fall shows in Game and Variety Bantams, we have to announce that, having had a successful season, we are prepared to supply their requirements in either young or old stock and of the kind that can hold their own in the hottest competition. In a recent article from the pen of A. E. Blunck of Johnstown, N. Y., published in the American Fancier, he stated that when showing against stock from Mountain Side, he knew he was "up against the real thing." Enough said. Why buy elsewhere when such an authority tells you where you can get "the real thing?" Our prices are reasonable in accordance with quality. The "real thing" is always cheap. Anything but the "real thing" in Bantams is dear at any price. All inquiries for stock should be addressed to the Manager, JOHN GLASGOW. 14-21

FINE English Setter pups, three months old. These pups are bred to hunt, and are fine individuals. Will be sold low. If you want something to find birds for you, write to me. M. B. HICKSON, Lynchburg, Va. 14-17

H. C. GRAFF, Kensington, Ohio, makes a specialty of tree dogs, classic coon dogs, still trailers and track barkers, also dogs on bear, skunk, squirrel, mink, rabbit, opossum, partridge, also Polish China pigs. Gilt edge pedigrees. Thoroughbred registered Airedale Terriers. State exact wants. 13-15

DOGS OF ALL KINDS for sale at all times. If you are in need of a choice dog, remember we can furnish it, being the largest dealers in the thoroughbred dogs in America. PENN SQUARE KENNELS, Frank P. Smith, Prop., 1428 South Penn Square, Philadelphia, Pa. 73-24 die by being lousy than from any other cause. You can talk about improper care and food, lack of green food and grit, but, when looking for the root of the trouble look for lice, and when you find them look into the merits of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies. Rev. H. H. Purrington, Mt. Vernon, Maine, writes: "We all use Death to Lice and find it most satisfactory." The Norton Poultry Yards, Dallas, Texas, writes: "We have been using your Death to Lice for the past four years and it has given entire satisfaction."

MORE CHICKENS

have head lice than most poultry keepers realize. Some think that these little pests are pin feathers on the top of a chicks' head and do not take the trouble to examine them closely until the broods begin to die off. One Massachusetts fancier says that it cost him hundreds of dollars to learn this. Death to Lice Ointment is made especially for the extermination of these little blood suckers, without injury to the little chicks. 100 doses 10c postpaid.

MORE CHICKENS

than should go into two coops are often crowded into one. The lice will then crowd into these small quarters and assist to make the nights long, hot and miserable. The little mites or spider lice crawl out of the cracks and crevices and extract more blood from the chicks than they can make during the day. Charles L. Evans, Wood River, Neb., writes: "I have given your 'special' a thorough trial. I had a hen-house that was polluted with mites. I mixed one (four) ounce box of special to one gallon of whitewash and gave it a thorough whitewashing. I now defy anyone to find a louse about my hen house."

MORE CHICKENS

properly cared for mean more money. Proper care means a liberal use of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies as well as suitable food and housing. No poultry keeper ever failed because he put too much money into Death to Lice. Many do fail because they do not keep their flocks free from vermin. The most successful money-making poulterers are those who use the most Lamberts. We have remedies for all kinds of lice, on anything and everything. We put it up in all sizes of packages to suit all kinds of people. We have all kinds of good testimonials as to its efficacy.

PRICE LIST.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

WHAT SAVED JUDGE CLARK'S CHICKENS.

Scotch Plains, N. J., Sept. 13, 1900—Judge Clark, when not dispensing law and dealing out justice, devotes a great deal of his time to raising chickens and ducks. About two weeks ago his fowls were attacked with a disease which began carrying them off at an alarming rate, notwithstanding all his efforts to check the epidemic. Several authorities on chickens were consulted and it was agreed that the fowls were suffering from some form of cholera. A remedy was at last found to check the disease. This was procured from the Star Incubator Co., of Bound Brook, and it proved to be just the thing, and the Judge is once more happy and will begin at once to replenish his stock.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15. one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION LABEL FULTON COUNTY No. 756

SATURDAY AUGUST 24 1901

From the Editor's Perch.

The system of feeding practised at Elm Poultry Yards, an account of which appears on another page of this issue, will perhaps create considerable discussion among poultry raisers and there will be many doubting Thomases to decry it. But we heard of a similar system used by a breeder of Leghorns, the only difference being that he used whole corn exclusively instead of wheat screenings. The fowls had free range and did amazingly well the year around.

Cambridge, N. Y., starts the big fall fairs of 1901 August 27th, followed a few days later by Toronto, Canada Both these great shows will have unusually large entries, we are informed.

The English Stock-Keeper editorially remarks:

"We have seen a letter just received from America by a well known Buff Orpington breeder in this country, in which the writer states that the Buff Orpington will very shortly be admitted to the Standard of the American Poultry Association, and that Judge Bridge, the president of the A. P. A., has already declared that there will be no opposition to the breed. Largely through the instrumentality of Mr. James S. Warne, a well known importer and exhibitor, a club has been formed for the breed and has been christened the Union Buff Orpington Club, of which Mr. Warne has been elected president, Mr. Lee Houston, of Iowa. vice-president, and Mr. S. W. Marshall secretary and treasurer. We are told that members are coming in fast, and when once the breed has been admitted by the A. P. A. there will be a boom that will beat anything ever known in the States. This is good news for English breeders. The Buff Orpington is just now at the height of its popularity, and the huge classes that we see at most of the shows contain quality that is approaching gradually and surely to the standard of perfection. An American boom, then, will reward those who have gone in for the variety in a satisfactory manner. We know our cousins across the water never do anything by halves. They will want the best there is to be had and they will not mind paying big prices for it. We hope, therefore, English breeders will meet the boom in a generous spirit and give good value. That is the way to establish a regular market. Of late years we have bought more of America than she has of us, but we have good grounds for believing that the Buff Orpington will be the means of putting many hundreds of pounds into the pockets of British breeders before the next two years have run."

Our esteemed contemporary is usually correct in most of the statements it makes and it would be hardly fair to criticise it for the few misstatements found in the above. The source of the information is to blame. Mr. Bridge is secretary, not president, of the American Poultry Association, and his alleged statement that Buff Orpingtons will be admitted to the American Standard of Perfection is rather premature. There are certain laws that govern the admission of a new breed to the Standard, and they must be conformed with before such a breed is accepted. We have not heard of any application being made for the admission of Buff Orpingtons up to the present time of writing.

As to a boom being started on Buff Orpingtons, we believe that was launched over a year ago. In a number of sections, notably Canada, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, the new breed has found much favor. It is certainly a very promising fowl, the great size and excellent utilitarian qualities being very much in evidence.

It has, however, a dangerous rival in the popular Buff Plymouth Rock, and the well known preference for yellow legged and yellow skinned fowls in the United States may seriously handicap the Orpington, as it is very similar to the Rock, color and comb being the same. The white or pink leg, however, will prove a drawback to a large extent as far as the practical side of the breed is concerned. From a fancier's standpoint, the Buff Orpington may prove a popular and permanent addition to our list of thoroughbred fowl.

The Stock-Keeper is also responsible for the following regarding the Campine boom in England:

"Talking of booms, the Campine appears to be drawing supporters day by day, and there are hardly enough birds in the country to fill the demand. We understand that Miss Edwards, of Coaley Poultry Farm, is the latest recruit to the breed and that she is about to visit Belgium early in September and means to thoroughly scour the country and secure the best she can find. It will soon be the custom for English fanciers needing a holiday to combine business with pleasure in this way. The Wyandotte and Plymouth Rock men will be off to the States, the Houdan men to sunny France, and the Orpington and Minorca men—well, we hardly know whether to advise them to go north or south, so they must use their own judgment. As regards the Campine, however, we have just read a statement made by a person whose name we have never heard before, who puts the average egg production of the breed at 250 eggs per annum, and declares that individual specimens have been known to lay 300 eggs each in the twelve months. Now this sort of thing is not likely to do the Campine any good. We have not grumbled because the breed so closely resembles the Pencilled Hamburg, and we have agreed that it is, perhaps, as good a layer as most of the other modern varieties, but when an attempt is made to push yarns like the above down our throats we feel it is time to rise up and point out that though the modern Ananias may not go in danger of sudden death like his Biblical forefather, he makes himself ridiculous as well as the cause he espouses."

The Campine was tried and found wanting in the United States. It was dropped from the American Standard of Perfection, and today but few Campines will be found in this country.

The vote for the location of the next meeting of the American Poultry Association has been called, and the votes will be received up to August 31st inclusive. Charleston, Cleveland and Philadelphia are the three places voted upon.

A special meeting of the American Poultry Association has been called by President Kimmey to take place at Buffalo October 25, during the poultry show at the Pan-American Exposition.

To judge by the labored attacks on the American Poultry Association in certain quarters, one comes to the conclusion that the "old Decimal crowd" is not dead yet.

In our next issue we will publish considerable matter relating to the famous French fowl—the Faverolle.

The editors of Poultry Success and The Illustrated Poultry Success are considerably exercised over the statements made by Wick Hathaway and Miller Purvis in regard to pulling foul or disqualified feathers from birds to be shown in competition. They consider it downright dishonest to do so. If they would get at the real cause for this alleged dishonesty they might take a more charitable view of the matter. We clip the following from the pen of J. W. Whitney, which appeared in the August Ohio Poultry Journal:

"With no disposition to antagonize the A. P. A. or the rules governing any poultry association or their exhibitions, I occupy the position personally that rules as arbitrary as those prohibiting the best preparation of exhibition birds for the show-room should be considered as simply a form made and used only from custom in former times. The fact that they are ignored by a large majority of exhibitors and recognized as so much red tape by judges in general gives force, if nothing more, to my position in this matter. I am strongly of the opinion that much dissatisfaction, and perhaps in rare cases fraud, could be avoided by abolishing all disqualifications and cutting for all defects."

That explains it in a nutshell. Color disqualifications have caused more trouble and created more dishonesty than anything else ever formulated and printed in the Standard.

To throw out the finest specimen of its kind ever seen or bred because of a small red feather or white tip in wings, or what not else of a trivial nature, is a crime against the laws of breeding and leads to the chopping block many a bird that otherwise would be a winner in the show pen and a good breeder in the yards.

To pull a feather or remove a small downy feather may be wrong according to the Standard law, but the love for a fine bird and the feeling that the laws laid down are unjust and arbitrary will ease many a fancier's conscience and he will commit the great(?) dishonesty attributed to him by the editors mentioned above. To add to the trouble, there are judges who take a fiendish delight in hunting for such defects and summarily "firing out" the specimen unfortunate enough to possess even the most trivial disqualification. Even strong glasses have been used to discover the possible orifice in the leg of a fowl where possibly a stray feather might have lodged. Such work is not calculated to help either the breed or its owner.

One of the easiest ways of destroying lice in the poultry quarters is to spray the inside thoroughly with crude petroleum. Where it can be secured it is generally sold cheap, so that it can be used freely.—Commercial Poultry.

Crude petroleum thus applied will not destroy the red louse, and the latter is the most dangerous and murderous brute in the parasite louse line. Like the red spider on plants, it needs heroic measures to keep it away from the fowls, young or old. Working only at night, it hides in the crevices of the houses and perches. Crude carbolic acid poured in the morning into these hiding places will soon rid the houses of the pest.

In this week's issue of the American Fancier the Millville Poultry Farm Co., of Millville, N. J., are offering a choice lot of Barred and Buff Plymouth Rocks, Buff and White Wyandottes, and Ducks for sale. They report a very successful season, and have added another large poultry house to their plant.

A Minorca Mystery Solved.

Geo. H. Northup, of Raceville, N. Y., has been mystified to know the cause of the great number of inquiries for his Black Minorcas which he has received from Australia and New Zealand during the past few months, but two very recent letters from Australia have cleared up the mystery by reporting that a pen of Black Minorcas which Mr. Northup shipped to Sydney in 1897 and progeny of same have won more than one-half of the Black Minorca prizes offered in New South Wales for two years past. These reports did not come from the buyer himself, but from other gentlemen who had bought stock from him, paying more than $15 00 per dozen for eggs from the imported Northup pen. The cock, "Colonel Northup," has won several silver cups in Australia and has never lost a first prize, though exhibited many times and in the largest shows of that country. Mr Northup has made several shipments of Minorcas both to Australia and New Zealand.

Transfer.

This certifies that I have this day sold Mr. Stuart Talbot, Edmeston, N. Y., my first prize cockerel and hen that was in first prize pen at Rochester show. Jan. 11 to 17, 1901. WM. L HOWELL.

Fancy Pheasants and Their Allies.

SILVER AND OTHER KALEEGE PHEASANTS.

The group of Pheasants known as Kaleeges are not so uniform in appearance as those that have been dealt with so far; but they are not hard to distinguish, nevertheless. In size they are about equal to the common Pheasant or larger; in form they somewhat recall the lighter breeds of poultry, especially in their vertically folded tails; both sexes are crested and have a red skin round the eye, which can expand upward and downward in the cocks when excited. The cocks are spurred and are very pugnacious; they have a curious habit of standing up and producing a whizzing noise by buzzing with their wings. The Kaleeges naturally fall into two types; those in which the cock has a full drooping crest and long curved tail like the Silver Pheasant, and those in which the cock's crest is narrow and projecting, and the tail little longer than the hen's, like the Lineated Pheasant. Few of the latter type are worth keeping, not being possessed of beauty either of form or color. The Kaleeges are forest birds, inhabiting the lower slopes of the Himalayas in India and other warm climates, but they are quite hardy in England. They are, however, quite useless as game birds, being very pugnacious, unwilling to rise on the wing, and flying inconveniently low for shooting when they do so.

THE SILVER PHEASANT.

This is the largest and finest of the Kaleeges, exceeding the common Pheasant in size. The cock's tail reaches two feet in length. In color he is purple-black on the crest and on the under parts from throat to tail; the upper plumage and tail are white, pencilled with fine concentric hair-lines of black, the pencilling becoming strong and bold on the feathers of the wing and tail. The centre tail-feathers, however, are unmarked, and at a little distance the whole upper plumage looks white. Some specimens are more strongly pencilled than others. The bill is light green, the bare red skin of the face has a rich velvety surface, and the legs are bright red, the long spurs being white. The bill, legs, etc., in the hen are not so bright; her plumage is plain snuffy brown, without any pencilling, except on the belly, where there is a little black pencilling, and on the outer pairs of tail-feathers, which are black pencilled with white.

Young cocks somewhat resemble the hen, but have buff pencilling on the wings, and have black breasts and black-and-white pencilled underparts below this.

The Silver Pheasant is a native of Southern China, but is now rare in a wild state in its native country, those exposed for sale there having generally been bred in Japan. It has long been known in Europe and is the easiest of all the Pheasants to keep and breed, while in beauty it is unsurpassed, its outlines being more graceful than those of any other member of the family, and its coloration equally chaste and striking. It is also so easily tameable that it may be allowed full liberty, and might no doubt be rendered a common poultry-yard bird in a few generations. But it has one drawback in its extremely vicious temper. Even the hens are savage with weaker birds; while the cocks will not only fight each other and occasionally kill their own hens, but, even in the breeding season, get so intolerably pugnacious as to attack human beings, especially ladies and children. And as they are big, powerful birds, and armed with very sharp and strong spurs which they well know how to use, their assault is far from being a joke. Of course all are not so bad as this, and no doubt a few years' selection for temper would result in the production of a sufficiently quiet breed. Although not so good for the table as most Pheasants, the domestic Silver Pheasant is found to be convenient, about February and March, for that purpose; and very few birds of any kind can equal it as an outdoor ornament, so that it is well worth a certain amount of care in cultivation. As it is, the Silver Pheasant is by far the best bird for a beginner, for, in addition to the good qualities I have allued to above, it has those of bearing confinement remarkably well and maintaining the purity of its plumage, even after long incarceration in a cage or hutch. Moreover, it does not make any unpleasant noise, so that it is admirably suited for a town neighborhood, where even Chanticleer may be voted a nuisance and the dismal yell of the Peacock or the merry whoop of the Argus would bring down the wrath of a whole parish on the luckless fancier who ventured on keeping them. In the spring the cock Silver Pheasant shows a great enlargement of the red velvet skin of the face, which rises above the eyes into two combs and hangs down below the cheeks like wattles, but his beauty can hardly be said to be improved thereby.

SWINHOE'S KALEEGE.

This species much resembles the Silver Pheasant in form, but is smaller and has a rather shorter tail. In the color of the face, feet and bill it resembles that bird, but differs much in plumage, being generally of a very richly glossed purple-black, set off by a white crest and centre tail-feathers. The upper back is also white, flanked on each side by a large patch of rich metallic maroon-red, and the edges of the wing-feathers have a green gloss. The whole effect is extremely rich and striking, and the bird has very few rivals even in this splendid family.

The hen is closely mottled with buff and black, thus differing from the hens of other Kaleeges, which are more uniform; her short crest, red face, and hen-like tail will distinguish her from other mottled hen Pheasants.

Young cocks, as usual, exhibit a mixture of both plumages.

Swinhoe's Pheasant is only found in a wild state in the Chinese island of Formosa; it has bred well in captivity in Europe, but is not so common as many other Pheasants as yet. Its singular beauty, however, combining grace of form with a brilliant and striking coloration, renders it one of the most noticeable kinds, and hence it is well worth including here.

THE LINEATED KALEEGE.

This is the only species of the short-tailed, prick-crested type of Kaleege worthy of attention at the hands of the fancier. It is about the size of the common Pheasant, with a very hen-like tail and the usual red skin round the eye. The cock is black on the crest and below, like the Silver Pheasant, and above of a delicate grey, the color being produced by a fine and close zig-zag pencilling of black and white, very similar to that seen on the males of many of the duck kind. The pencilling gets coarser on the wings and tail, and the inner or upper webs of the two central feathers of the latter are pure white, affording a pleasing contrast to the rest of the plumage. There are always some white streaks on the sides of the breast, and sometimes the whole lower plumage may be thus marked. The species seems to be generally rather variable, the legs ranging from pinkish flesh-color to bluish horn-color, and the eyes from brown to white.

The hen is brown, streaked and spotted with white on the forepart of the body, and with the side-tail feathers pencilled coarsely and irregularly with black and white.

This Pheasant extends from Burma to Siam. It is not very common in confinement, although it has bred repeatedly in the London Zoo. It is well worth its keep, as its plumage, though quiet, has a delicate beauty of its own, and it crosses well with the Silver Pheasant, to which, in spite of the difference in form, it is evidently very nearly related. The hybrid is a most beautifully pencilled bird, and is—the male at all events—practically indistinguishable from a true species, Anderson's Silver Pheasant, which is found in Upper Burma and Annam, and has been described under several names. Some Annam specimens of this bird are, or were recently, on view at the Paris Jardin des Plantes. There is a stuffed bird shown in the Calcutta Museum. A specimen has also lived at the London Zoo. Considering the admiration which accurate marking always evokes among English fanciers, the wonderful regularity and beauty of the pencilling of this bird ought to make it one of the most popular of the Pheasants, if it be introduced. And there is great hope of this, inasmuch as the birds have bred in Paris, and when I saw them seemed to be doing very well. The hen of this species is brown, with white V-shaped pencilling on the breast, and all the tail feathers uniform brown alike.—F. Finn, B. A., F. Z. S., in the Feathered World, England.

Elm Poultry Yards.

At Vernon, Conn., just out of the city of Hartford, are located the farms of Elm Poultry Yards. Here we saw the most healthful accommodations for poultry that it has yet been our fortune to see. The exhibition yards that have been located at West Hartford will be removed early in October to a new addition to the Vernon Plant, Mr. Grosebeck having purchased twelve acres of beautiful rolling land adjoining the other plant. On this new purchase, which has never been used for poultry, will soon be built a most complete arranged lot of houses for the sole use of the high-class exhibition stock.

The varieties bred at Vernon are among the most popular of all fowls. The hundreds of prizes won on White Leghorns, White Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Barred Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas and Light Brahmas tell of their superiority in the keenest competition, a result that owes much of its success to the constitutional vigor which comes through the methods applied in these yards, where the very best to be obtained will be found. Here they have almost unlimited range under the most invigorating conditions.

The colony plan of housing is largely in use, each variety having its own section of the farm, which is divided from the balance by high wire fencing which runs down the hillside to a running stream which furnishes an endless supply of water continually the year round. In addition to this there are a number of springs on the farm, all of which run to this stream, furnishing a plentiful supply of water in all the parks used for the growing stock. Not for several years has the stock which occupy these yards been supplied with water other than which the springs and streams furnish for them.

Each set of yards are planted with fruit trees that are well cultivated. These yards are plowed, harrowed and leveled about these trees and each hundred fowls is allotted about an acre which assures a continuous range over untainted ground. We cannot see how it could be possible to improve these conditions or to add to the excellent management of the place.

The enviable reputation which has come to Elm Poultry Yards is a deserving return for quality sent out and fair treatment to its customers. No one has cause to find fault with either, for no reasonable demand has ever gone unheeded at these yards. Nowhere can be found better quality than here, and all are served from the stock on hand.

On the side hill south of the station is located the White Leghorn quarters, large, roomy colony houses for each flock of fifty. A splendid lot of fine, large and elegant Leghorns have the range of this park that is planted to an orchard of apple and peach trees. Perfect freedom of this unlimited range assures strength and vigor that is seldom found. Eggs sold from these Leghorns have produced winners in almost every state in the Union; there is no selecting or sending of better quality to one patron than another. All are served from the same collection which he has sent forth to the world so much of the highest quality in White Leghorns. The hens are never confined a single day in the year. Each house has a roosting department and a large scratching room enclosed, but the small door for exit is always open. No record has been kept of the average egg yield of the whole thousand hens, but the following facts do appear as to sales of eggs from the flocks: From each hen, 50 eggs sold for hatching, 8 cents, $4; from each hen, 100 eggs sold to market, 2 cents, $2, giving an actual income from each hen of $6 per year. In addition to this, two pens of 20 hens each have been kept separate and fed for egg production, and the result gave 230 eggs average from each hen in pen No. 1 and 235 eggs average from each hen in pen No. 2, for a year. Each variety kept is handled the same as the Leghorns. Each have equal room, quarters and care, none are pushed for egg yield, and all are under the most watchful care as to health. A fowl that shows the slightest ailment at any time is removed to the hospital yard, and absolute health all along the line is prominently present.

For years the fowls on the farm have only been fed once a week the year round. Thus have all rules of feeding been over-run and the fowls of the farm taught to get their own breakfast. Plainly do we hear the cry of "nonsense" loud and clear, but with no more vehemence than I used myself when first told of the methods used. But after a thorough investigation I am now fully satisfied as to the facts and good results obtained. Within each house is a large feed hopper that holds two bushel or more, the wagon goes over the farm with sacks of feed once a week, then each hopper is filled and from these the fowls help themselves at will. I examined many of the fowls, none were poor, none were over fat, but all in good condition, a result which scatters the fondest theories and heralds abroad the good sense of the hen when able to feed themselves at will. All the fowls, young and old, are in fine health, a good paying egg yield, the handling of thousands with the least possible labor and the cheapest ration per head that I have ever known in the hen business, and to my astonishment I found the young stock was fed in the same way. All over the place, under cover, is the same style hopper full of feed to which the chicks of all ages have full freedom. Only the very young chicks with hens and in the brooder houses are fed in any other way.

The only grain fed on the farm is wheat screenings of the best quality that I have ever seen. It is almost entirely free from chaff or dirt, and comes in car-loads from the northwest. This is the only food that has been fed on the farm for years, the large extended range furnishing an endless supply of natural food, including worms, bugs and berries of all kinds the greater part of the year. The fowls, old and young, are large and vigorous. The young chicks show fully the equal of any I have ever seen under the most approved methods of feeding at the same age. At the plant in West Hartford are bred pens, pairs and single matings. Some of all the kinds bred at the farm. All this stock has been bred in line for nine years for the purpose of having true, distinct line bred males for all the matings at the farm. In this way, new, pure blood of the highest quality is continually infused into the farm flocks, giving them direct advantage of true line breeding as a top cross each season, without any of the dangers that will come from line breeding.

The Panama Canal.

PRESENT intimate commercial relations between the United States and the Republic of Columbia will probably result in the former securing and finishing the Panama Canal. Long headed capitalists, appreciating the wonderful natural resources of Columbia are investing in everything there. English capitalists are working coal, iron and gold mines. American capitalists are developing mining, railroad, steamship, rubber, coffee, cotton, timber, colonial and grazing enterprises. Many of the strongest and best known capitalists of Boston, New York and Chicago have invested in some of them. Among them may be mentioned T. Jefferson Cooleidge, Fred L. Ames, Oliver Ames, John L. Gardner, Albert W. Nickerson, J. Murray Forbes, Wm. H. Forbes, W. Powell Mason, Lawrence Minot, Joseph S. Fay, Jr., Henry D. Hyde, George V. L. Meyer, Henry Parkman, Allan Curtis, Thos. R. Whiting, W. H. Hendee, Cassius M. Gilbert and James C. Bright, are interested, controls nineteen rich copper concessions of about 107 acres each, making something over a hundred ordinary mining claims, together with timber, coal and limestone properties and water rights and water powers there.

Of these concessions the Consul General of Columbia at New York says:

"I do know that in the districts where they are located copper is found in very great abundance, and I have no doubt myself that these mining concessions will prove very rich in that metal upon being properly equipped and worked.

Columbia is a great mineral storehouse, which heretofore has been third in the production of gold and a very large producer of silver, but in the struggle for these precious metals the vast copper deposits have remained undeveloped. I am glad. as I know every Columbian will be, to see American and English capital now seeking these rich fields, for I am sure that investments could not be made anywhere with prospects for greater and more certain returns to capital than in the above region, which I believe will quickly develop into one of the greatest copper producing fields in the world."

Editor American Fancier: The New Jersey Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association have about completed arrangements for their coming show to be held in Masonic Temple, Trenton, N. J., Dec. 10th to 14th. The popular and efficient George B. Randolph is superintendent, and the services of McGrew, Parker, Purdue, Nevius, Ungerer, Jager, Stanton, Tiemann and Kennedy have been secured to judge. This assures exhibitors their stock will be well cared for and the ribbons placed where they belong. Liberal cash specials and silver cups will be offered on mostly all the breeds, and it is hoped this will be the largest show ever held in New Jersey. Cavies will have a good classification, and already a good display of the little pets is assured. A premium list may be had for the asking.

Grange Week at the Pan-American.

New York State Grange week, beginning August 26th, bids fair to be a record breaker at the Pan-American Exposition. The State Executive Committee have been working unceasingly for the past two weeks and have finally completed their arrangements for this farmers' holiday season. They have had the hearty cooperation of the Exposition management, the press and the railroads. The principal Midway attractions, ever on the alert to catch on to a good thing, are preparing special attractions for the week. It will be the best time to visit the best week of the best exposition ever held. The railroads will run excursions from all points of the State at lowest rates. Wednesday, August 28th, will be the special Grange day, and appropriate exercises will be held in the Temple of Music in the morning and sports in the Stadium in the afternoon. The committee have further looked after the welfare of their friends by establishing in the Grange building on the grounds Mrs. B. B. Lord and also at 72 Exchange street (opposite the N. Y. C. Union depot) Past Lecturer E. P. Cole, of the Keese Information Company, where pleasant and commodious rooms will be assigned at reasonable rates. This will insure first-class accommodations to all without trouble and loss of time.

Peacomb R. I. Reds.

Editor American Fancier: The writer would be much pleased if you will allow him space in which to say a few words to breeders, or, in fact, anyone interested in the perfecting of the Peacomb variety of R. I. Reds. Considerable has been written for and against this variety during the last few years, in which I have taken part—in fact, about the first article I ever wrote for the poultry press was an article on this variety in reply to one in which a prominent writer and fancier advocated this style of comb for R. I. Reds to the exclusion of any other.

I still have no desire to see this style alone, but am of the opinion that the three styles can and will be bred on birds having the characteristics of R. I. Reds to the detriment of neither one. Being of this opinion and realizing that in union and amalgamation of ideas the variety can better be perfected and justice done to its excellent qualities, I have written to a number of gentlemen whom I know are greatly interested in this variety looking towards the forming of a club during the coming show season.

As most of the gentlemen written to on the matter think that the best place to hold such a meeting would be in conjunction with the Rhode Island Poultry Association, and I have information from the secretary that classes will be granted for this variety, with perhaps a few specials. I think that is a very kind offer, and I hope that the breeders of this variety will avail themselves of it and send their birds and, if possible, come themselves and attend the meeting.

Before going any further, I want it to be distinctly understood that there is no idea in my mind to set up a club to in any way work in rivalry to the present club, which same has been of incalculable benefit to the R. I. Red and its breeders. The plan is to form a club for the purpose of getting justice, also the ideas of breeders as to the best possible manner in which this variety may be brought to a more perfect standard.

Anyone interested in this variety, no matter how humble a breeder he may be, is cordially invited to correspond with the writer, giving his ideas and anything that he considers may be of help to the object sought.

Hoping to hear from a goodly number and that they will be at the meeting with the Rhode Island Poultry Association along with their birds, I remain, yours for better R. I. Reds, especially with pea combs, JOHN LOWE.

A Hatching Gobbler.

During my boyhood days the live stock on my father's farm included a flock of turkeys, consisting of a large and handsome male or gobbler and four or five hen turkeys. Early in the summer one of the hens, who had at length supplied her secreted nest with a dozen or more eggs, betook herself to "setting" or the tedious task of hatching her eggs, which required her to keep them constantly and evenly warm for the long space of four weeks—a process only to be accomplished by imparting to the eggs warmth from her own body. The first step in the operation was to pluck her poor breast bare of its soft feather coat for the double purpose of feathering her nest and that the eggs might come in closer proximity to her warm, bare breast.

But this demand upon her natural instinct had another effect; it deprived her companions, and especially the gobbler, of her society, and for a full month. Presently the others, one by one and in like manner, deserted the flock and took to setting, until at length the gobbler had but one companion before whom he could strut and lavish upon her proud but courteous attention, and who in turn aided him in his daily chase after grasshoppers.

Finally, the last hen yielded to the promptings of nature, and following the example of her sisters, she too had filled her nest and likewise began the hatching process, leaving poor old gobbler a lovelorn melancholy specimen of hen-pecked, forsaken husband. I was but a lad at the time, but well remember the doleful appearance of the poor fowl as he aimlessly and alone wandered about for a day or two, and to this day I would like to know what he thought of his deserted condition and lonely situation.

At all events, he was equal to the emergency, and as he was a day or two in determining what to do about it, his conclusion was no doubt reached after some degree or mode of consideration, and this is what he did. The hen which had been his last single companion had chosen her nest in a spot well hidden and sheltered by an old stone fence, and as her nest had also been visited by some Guinea fowl she had a large supply of eggs, some her own and some laid by the Guinea hens. The gobbler's next move was to attach himself to the vicinity of this nest, and he could not be coaxed or tempted to leave it. Next, and with the appearance of affection, he nestled himself close down beside his loved companion and, in short, made for himself an adjoining nest, into which he managed to purloin some of the eggs. Possibly the very idea of setting himself may have been suggested to him in the observation that she had more eggs than she could cover. Whatever his meditations were, however, his actions clearly demonstrated the fact that he was about to "sit," and he did sit and hatch and helped to raise the chicks, all with perfect propriety.

He began by plucking bare his masculine breast and copying his helpmate in every particular, even to "clucking" and indications of warning at approach of suspected danger. And thus this poor masculine bird actually and faithfully "sat," and for the full term of four weeks, keeping watch over his companion and imitating all her careful attention to her eggs, and in due season, and coincident with that of mistress turkey, his perseverance was duly rewarded, for he hatched fully as many chicks as she did, after which they had a happy summer in the joint care of their young, of which the gobbler had such an unusual share in their parentage.

This is the only instance of a male fowl hatching eggs that ever came under my own observation, and in all the subsequent years I never heard of but one other, and in that case also the bird was a turkey gobbler.

The American Poultry Association.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Columbus, O., Aug. 7, 1901.

To Members of the American Poultry Association: Having received the requests of five or more members of the Executive Committee of the American Poultry Association to call an extra meeting of the association at Buffalo, N. Y., in connection with and at the time of the holding of the Pan-American Exposition, to be held Oct. 21–31, 1901;

And in pursuance of said requests, and in accordance with Article I of the by-laws of said association, such extra meeting is hereby called to meet at Buffalo, N. Y., in the New York State Building, Pan-American Exposition, Oct. 25, A. D. 1901, at 8 o'clock p. m.

FRED. L. KIMMEY, Pres.

The Rochester Show.

Editor American Fancier: At the annual election of officers of the Flower City Poultry and Pigeon Association the following were elected: President, Geo. Shelter; secretary, John Drechsler; treasurer, Geo. W. Webb; superintendent of exhibition, William Toogood. The president succeeds himself, as well he might, considering his past successes as chief executive of the association. Mr. George Belgian Minorca Webb also succeeds himself as treasurer, and considering the number of bank cashiers who are constantly absconding, three years seems a long time for one man to hold the office and yet be honest. The superintendent of the exhibition, Mr. Toogood, has been too long a past master in the art of breeding winning White Rocks for me to mention his qualifications as a fancier. Having served for many years as assistant superintendent, he is eminently qualified to coop and care for birds in the showroom.

F. B. Zimmer, Sharp Butterfield and H. J. Quilhot will pick the winners in the poultry classes, while W. Mack and Geo. E. Peer will do likewise in the pigeon classes.

The finest hall in western New York has been secured, well lighted and situated in the heart of the business portion of Rochester. It therefore behooves the fanciers to send their entries early if they desire to exhibit in hot competition.

200 Eggs Per Hen.

More poultry men and women get from 100 to 125 eggs per hen per year than over that amount. And why? There are only four reasons why. First, the stock; second, the houses; third, the feed; fourth, the care given. Again, there are only two classes who make money by keeping poultry—the person who has only a few, and the one who makes it a business. Two hundred eggs per hen per year is not an unusual event, and there is no reason why every poultry man should not have that kind.

It is not necessary to have trap-nests to find out your layers. The poultry man who has to use them for that purpose is not the one to make a success of poultry keeping, because if he has to depend on a contrivance it is only proof that he can not place any dependence on himself. As soon as one has to rely on others it is high time that he gives up the business. If you want to find your layers, stay with your fowls, pick them out, hang up a daily record and watch it. If you have not the time for this, then you certainly belong to the middle class. Unless you give the fowls all your time you can not expect them to make money for you. Unless you know your fowls they will not make you money; even if you have a hen that is a known layer and she is undersized or too large, don't breed from her; if you do you are wasting both time and money.

Stock has greatly improved in the past five years, but egg production has not. When poultry men devote more time trying to find out which way and how is the best to feed, then they will increase the egg production. Because John Jones tells you that his way of feeding is the best, that is not the reason why you should adopt it, until you know it to be a fact. Because Sam Jones tells you that one variety of chickens will lay more than the others, don't sell what you have and get them until you know it is so. Poultry men are too ready to listen to the other fellow.

The poultry keeper can not run his business on guess work; he must know what he is doing. You have more friends (?) who want to see you make a fizzle than want to see you make a success. You can no more run a poultry plant with cheap appliances than you can run a railroad with a poor watch. If you have a hundred dollars to put in a poultry house, don't try to see how big you can build it, but how well it can be built. You can not get 50 cents per dozen for your eggs the year around, and will be mighty lucky if you average 24. I don't know of any one who has made a fortune from keeping poultry, but know many who make a good income every year. You must be conservative.

My method of obtaining and holding great layers is as follows, no matter what the variety kept:

As soon as the pullets are fully matured, they are carefully watched. As soon as one starts to lay she is removed to her permanent quarters, punch-marked, a record hung up, date of hatch, pen hatched from, etc. This goes on until pens are full. Those that are backward in starting are put in a different building, we counting them as culls. The pullets and records are carefully watched. We do not breed from these as pullets, but will breed from the cream of them as yearlings. They are now yearlings, and we start to hatch. Each egg is marked with pen number. When put in incubators same is set down in a ledger for that purpose, also giving the number of male bird and what he was hatched from. When the eggs are due to hatch they are put in pedigreed egg trays. This keeps each pen of chicks separate. They are then punch-marked and placed in brooders, which are grouped in colonies, separated with fine meshed wire, so that the chicks can not get mixed. The cockerels are removed as soon as possible and fattened for market. We pick out a few, those that we think will make extra good ones, and then turn them on free range. Soon the pullets are removed, each lot to a separate house and yard, and then we wait for the first eggs, which brings us to the beginning of this chapter.

The houses must be well built, perfectly dry, enough room, and must be built warm. My preference is for long houses with scratching sheds built so they can be closed in severe weather. We made many mistakes while building and have been trying to remedy them at considerable expense. One group of eight houses had to be torn down and rebuilt; other houses built single-boarded had to be lined. Now, we always build with matched boards, using pine and line with a four-inch dead-air space.

Never try to see how many birds you can crowd into a pen; keep cutting your number down by constant culling. Build your yards double, so that you can keep green stuff growing in one part the year around. Always have two boards at the bottom. Do not put on a top rail. Don't let filth accumulate in the yards or any other place.

You must start your feeding for heavy laying soon after the chick is hatched. This part of poultry keeping is entirely too much neglected. I believe more damage is done by letting cockerels remain with the pullets while growing than from any other cause; it will put them back two months on their laying and they will never make as good birds. It certainly stunts them. A pullet must be in the best of condition if you expect her to be a heavy layer, and you must keep her that way if you want her to keep on laying. My experience teaches me that we must have large framed birds, and to get that kind you must start feeding as a little chick. You can put on flesh any time, but there is only one time to form large bones, and that is on the start.

There is no reason why people should say: "Well, if you keep Leghorns, you have nothing to eat when you kill them." A five or five and a half pound Leghorn will lay as many eggs as a three-pound one, and will cost no more to keep. You don't have to introduce foreign blood to gain size.—C. A. Durling in Cincinnati Packer.

How To Obtain An Early Moult.

The heated rays of torrid days
Will break the shells asunder;
Lice spring to life with all their might
To sleep and suck and plunder.

This is the most enervating month of the year. All mankind and animal life, save the many kinds of insects that feed on both. are languid.

This month the feathers begin to fall in their annual moult, the renewal of which demands fiber and blood. If well fed when this begins, the fowls will moult the quicker; the sooner the old feathers fall, that much faster will the new ones grow.

A fowl that is poorly fed at moulting time suffers during this period. In fact, many die from lack of strength to sustain the demand upon the system. Life, strength and motive power must be provided for, as well as the usual demand for food, to create the fiber and blood for the new plumage. It is a well known fact that if fowls are almost starved for two weeks in August and then fed on double rations, 90 per cent. of them will finish their moult early. If you will follow the same method in May or June, they will shed their plumage just the same. It is an old trick to allow hens that are desired to moult early for fall shows to sit for four or five weeks during warm weather. During this period, little food is given. When removed from the nest and put in other quarters and fed heavily, the feathers soon begin to fall. Confinement during two weeks of hot weather in very warm houses on short rations will give the same results.

To finish early for showing, allow the hens you wish to exhibit to sit on the nest when broody for two or three weeks; feed short rations, remove the hens from the nest, allow them full freedom for a week, during which time feed them very strong; at the end of this time give them thorough washing in water as warm as your hands will stand. When thoroughly dry, shut them in a pen that is perfectly clean and that has a clean sand floor; feed plenty of rich, strong food, green food and grit, and never allow them to run in the sun. Have a small grass run for their use, but have it well protected from the sun. A number can be kept together. Usually such treatment brings quick results.

Exhibition males may be aided in their moult, but it is not so easy. Allow them to become very thin in flesh while living in an open run, and gradually change to a rich, oily diet. When the male begins to improve, and his feathers begin to drop or loosen, give him a good wash in water as hot as your hands will stand; when dry, put into a darkened runway and feed well. Try the tail and wing feathers every day or two; aid their removal when loose; do not pull them violently. If the shedding process does not begin in two weeks, give him another hot bath. As quickly as the feathers begin to fall, lend your aid by removing a few each day. We have seen Brahmas shed out this way so as to be in new plumage September 1st.

We notice that one man in New York can raise 140 bushels of sunflower seed to the acre. We should recommend that the whole farm be turned into growing this crop, which seldom sells for less than $1.50 per bushel; and no kind of feed is so good for fowls in moult, whether early or late. Sunflower seed is in good demand for feeding fowls, and the man who can produce 140 bushels to the acre could build proper housing for drying and make a fortune. —Country Gentleman.

The Dewlap of the Toulouse Goose.

We have just received a new number of the journal Le Bulletin avicole de l'Association des Eleveurs de France, and read with pleasure a second article on the subject of the dewlap of the Toulouse goose by M. des Essarts. His first article made some commotion among breeders. L'Eleveur reproduced the article in full, with the following preliminary note:

"It is evident the dewlap has been imposed on us as characteristic of the Toulouse goose by rogues desirous of getting rid of their old birds, but everybody in the north has not been convinced, as will be shown by the following article."

"This," says M. des Essarts, "is the absolute confirmation of my views, and I have only to thank M. P. Megnon (Editor, L'Eleveur), for giving me the support of his great authority. The second journal which has been so good as to extol my views with regard to the dewlap of the Toulouse goose is the famous Belgian breeders' journal, Chasse et Peche, &c."

It is really too good of M. des Essarts to attribute to us more science and experience than we possess, since we must confess our ignorance and conclude that the question of the dewlap can only be decided by practical experience.

That the dewlap is a sign of old age we willingly admit, but large size is also a sign of old age amongst most birds; nevertheless, large size is no defect amongst young birds, on the contrary it is a most recherche quality.

In his account of the poultry at the last Smithfield show, M. de Loverdo, as to whose competence there can be no doubt, wrote, "as to geese, their general condition is perfect, English geese can not be compared with them." "It appears to me," says M. des Essarts, "that such judgment is unquestionable." We have weighed the best birds in company with M. de Loverdo, but unfortunately we have not the results with us. However, our impression was that the English geese and poultry in general were larger, but not so fine as the foreigners.

The average weight of a Toulouse gander of this year, killed and plucked, is somewhere between 9 and 10 kilos. Exceptionally fine birds exceed 12 kilos. It is not always in the largest birds that the liver is the most developed (one still ignores the laws which follow the fatty degeneration of this organ.) Its average weight is about 950 grammes, but it sometimes weighs 1 kil, 200 grammes. The Toulouse goose is the foundation of the kitchen of the southwest. A correspondent says that if Toulouse geese have no dewlap it is bad for them. The Toulouse goose has a bag of fat, and the larger and more elastic this bag is the better for the bird. When the skin hangs under the bill and over the neck like a bib, the bird will more readily fatten.

The senior of all French aviculturists, M. Ernest Lemoine of Crosne (Seine-et-Oise) wrote in 1886: "The amateur who tries to make you believe that the Toulouse goose ought to have a glandulous swelling under the head is surely an amateur who has geese of this kind for sale. The glandulous swelling ought not to exist among the pure Toulouse breed. They have never had a glandulous swelling, but a simple hanging fold of the skin, not as a bib, but as an even fin from under the beak between the two jaws. An emerited amateur for some time past has bred geese of which the bib only began to show towards the age of four years and became larger every year."

A more experienced amateur, M. Firmin de Smet, breeds Siam and Guinea geese, of which the dewlap is developed from the first year. Then again, L'Eleveur cites the old and ridiculous story of Siam geese exhibited at Havre, on the dewlaps of which "one saw traces of melted leaden bullets with which they had been pinched, and which they had carried before coming to the exhibition. The prime geese of Siam without dewlaps were given a higher place than those with dewlaps."

This undoubtedly proves that if one of the judges had ever raised a goose in his life he would have seen for himself that what he took for leaden bullets were little balls of mud which geese with dewlap must necessarily pick up whilst feeding from the ground. It is as if M. Firmin de Smet was a man to allow his servants to trim his geese for sale. We recollect perfectly the goose in question, for not having had occasion to wash itself at its leisure its dewlap had assumed a triangular shape, and it was for this reason that under another judge it was beaten by a rival of which the dewlap had maintained its fine round shape.—L. Vander Snicket in Chasse et Peche.

Some Causes Of Sudden Death In Poultry and Pigeons.

Cases of sudden death are by no means uncommon amongst poultry and pigeons, but I have been induced to write this article on account of the exceptionally numerous instances of sudden death which have come under my notice during the past few weeks, and which appear to be due to the hot and dry weather which has recently been experienced in most parts of the country. At this period of the year there are usually more cases of sudden death amongst pigeons than at any other, owing to the fact that the energy required in feeding their young causes a good many cases of syncope, which would not occur at any other time. I am constantly called upon to explain the causes of death of birds, both poultry and pigeons, which, up to a few minutes of their death, or it may be up to even a few hours of the time when they are discovered to be dead, they were seen by their owners to be apparently in perfect health, and not suffering from any complaint. I have noticed, with some amusement, that in the majority—I think I can say the majority—of these cases the owners jump to the conclusion that their birds have been poisoned, and I get a large number of more or less pointed allusions to the next-door neighbor in the letters which I receive describing the symptoms. Now it will perhaps be as well for me to make a few remarks on poisoning cases whilst dealing with the ordinary causes of sudden death.

There are two principal which give rise to sudden death—syncope and apoplexy. Syncope causes very sudden death; apoplexy causes sudden incapability, but death rarely ensues immediately. Besides these there are various forms of internal inflammation, which cause very rapid death—not what can be called sudden death, but unexpected death in the course of a few hours. The principal of these is a form of gastritis or stomachic inflammation. I shall, therefore, divide this article into four headings, under each of which respectively will be given the symptoms of and treatment for syncope, apoplexy, gastritis and poisoning.

Syncope is the technical term for the commonest form of heart disease. It can best be understood by instancing, as I have done above, the case of a pigeon which has been feeding its young. This involves a very great strain, as all pigeon keepers know, for it can often be noticed how thoroughly exhausted parent birds are sometimes after feeding their young. It is by no means uncommon for a bird to fall down dead—literally to die without a struggle after this exertion. The explanation is that syncope is a fainting fit—a heart seizure too suddenly fatal to admit of anything being done whatever. A post-mortem examination of birds which have died in this way generally reveals a peculiar condition of the heart, one side being distended with blood to its fullest capacity, whilst the other is emptied, or nearly so. It very rarely happens, as I said before, that anything can be done in a case like this, but if a bird is seen suddenly to faint and fall down, the best thing to do is to run for a small quantity of brandy, or any other stimulant that happens to be near, and administer a little of that, which, in rare cases, may cause the subject to rally.

Apoplexy is the effect produced by the rupture of a small blood vessel in or near the brain—cerebral hemorrhage is the technical term for it—and it is due to an obstruction in the circulation of the blood caused by an excess of food, or by the inaction of the digestive process brought about by excitement. A apoplectic seizure does not result in immediate death; the bird is paralyzed, and may die—usually will die—in the course of a few hours, without recovering consciousness. but there are cases in which a bird rallies from an attack like this, which it will do only if the effusion is a very small one. Again, the bird may rally and be better for a few hours or for days, weeks, or even months, until a larger effusion causes paralysis again, and the bird succumbs. The mildest form of apoplexy is to be seen in the complaint usually known as vertigo, in which the bird seems to turn giddy, and twists its neck on one side, often turning itself round and round in a staggering way. This is probably brought about by a very small blood effusion, or even by pressure of blood in the region of the brain, without actual bursting of a vessel—a complaint to which over fed birds are always liable. Now, what is to be done in the case of a bird which has had an apoplectic seizure, or which has vertigo? Well, in the case of a fowl, my advice is to cut its throat and have it cooked. The only treatment at all likely to do it any good consists in blood letting, which can be done by penetrating the vein under the wing, but which is quite beyond the management of an ordinary amateur, and even then when once a bird has had a seizure of this kind he will always be liable to another, and I should never think it was possible to effect a cure. The case is a little different to a pigeon which does not possess any table value, and will probably be worth the trouble of treating. Keep it very quiet and let it wait until it regains consciousness. Of course, if it does not regain consciousness the case is hopeless. But if it once regains consciousness, give it a dose of castor oil and wait until that has taken effect. Then continue to keep quiet and feed it for a day or two only on some such soft food as well boiled oat-meal, taking care not to let it have the least excitement. I may just say that I entirely dissent from the recommendations that I have seen made by some writers on this matter, who advise the application of cold water to the head, and the use of stimulants like brandy. Either of these two are likely to cause a fatal termination, for the effect of cold water would be to stanch as it were the blood and prevent its reabsorption into the system, whilst the effect of a stimulant would be to cause excitement in other parts of the system which it would be very undesirable to stir up. Absolute quiet, and an aperient as soon as consciousness is regained, are the only two things likely to prove effective.

Gastritis is inflammation, which may be induced either by the use of a very stimulating food or by direct poison—in fact it is symptomatic of irritant poisons. The symptoms of gastritis are efforts to vomit, great thirst, rapid breathing and finally collapse. In the case of poultry this gastritis is frequently induced by the administration of cayenne pepper and other pungent spices, and if poultry keepers only knew how unsuitable these things are for their fowls there would be no more fortunes to be made through the sale of poultry spice. The best thing to do when a bird shows signs of this trouble is to let it drink freely of barley water, which is mucilaginous, and allays the internal irritation, whilst relieving the bird of its agonising thirst. Besides this, a few doses of salad oil may be given from time to time, preceded by one good brisk dose of castor oil, the object of which is to carry off, if possible, anything of an irritating nature which may be the temporary cause of the condition. Enteric disease or bowel complaint, which is distinguishable from gastritis by the presence of symptoms of diarrhœa, will yield to the same treatment. Here I may point out as a general rule—(though there are plenty of exceptions to it, but it is a general rule) that a bird which shows symptoms of diarrhœa has not been poisoned; whereas a bird which shows all the other symptoms of gastritis and enteritis, but without any diarrhœa may be suspected of having taken poison.

Poisoning.—As I said at the commencement of this article, very large numbers of cases of supposed poisoning—in fact the great majority—are purely imaginary. We can reduce the cases of poisoning amongst poultry and pigeons to a very small compass, to which, of course, there are occasional exceptions, but on the whole there are not many poisons likely to be given. Poultry about farms are liable to get vermin killer from the stacks and vermin killer usually is made with strychnine. Symptoms of poisoning by strychnine are as clear as possible, for the bird or animal which dies from strychnine poisoning has its limbs drawn up into all sorts of curious contortions. If a bird is found dead with its limbs drawn up in that way and other birds are sickening and look likely to die, as much sulphate of zinc as would lie on a shilling had better be given to each in a little warm water. The effect of this will be to form an insoluble compound with the strychnine, and then the next thing to do will be to wash out the crop, so as to remove the sulphate of zinc and the strychnine—for sulphate of zinc is itself a poison, and it would not do to allow that to remain in the crop for long. Therefore, warm water should be poured down the throat and into the crop. All this can be squeezed out again, and subsequently a dose of castor oil can be given. This is risky, but it is really the only chance that remains of saving a bird that has had strychnine. Then there is sulphate of copper, which is used to dress wheat, and birds sometimes get hold of that, but that is a matter which must be prevented, and farmers who use it must look after their poultry, whilst poultry keepers who let their birds stray on to other people's land must abide by the consequences. Then we have various poisonous seeds and berries which can only be determined by post-mortem examination, and concerning which it is almost impossible to give any directions as to treatment, although if it be suspected that a bird has had poisonous berries the safest thing to do is to wash out the crop quickly, and give a good dose of castor oil. I have known other cases of poisoning caused by white lead and such like painting materials—also cases of undoubted poisoning by tea leaves have come under my notice, but this latter, I think, is usually brought about by the effect of the tannin in tea upon other food in the crop, causing a form of gastritis. I have not said anything about arsenic, which is used for a good many purposes and often causes death both to poultry and pigeons—but cases of arsenical poisoning can only be determined by an examination, and it is impossible to give any instructions which would enable a man to determine whether the bird has been poisoned with arsenic, so that if anyone has reason to suppose that their birds have been so poisoned, the best advice I can give is that they wash out the crop at once and give a dose of castor oil.—W. There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

DRS. TAFT BROS', MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 150th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

PIGEONS.

Lofty Thoughts of the Editor

Pigeon breeders are now looking over the crop of 1901 youngsters with a view of culling out the worst, in order to give the good ones the more room in which to get through that trying ordeal for a young pigeon—its first moult. Every attention should be given to birds and loft during the hot weather, for unless you keep everlastingly at it you will be surprised some day to find unexpectedly a crop of pigeon mites, and my experience is that of all the pests hard to deal with these are the worst. A good plan, to be sure, is to get a can such as gardeners use for sprinkling and make a mixture of one part kerosene oil and three parts water and sprinkle well the loft and nesting boxes after a thorough cleaning out. Do this several times and then a good thick coat of whitewash, which will give your loft the finishing touch and set off your birds to perfection. All nest boxes should be removed and a bracket perch of some kind placed about eighteen inches apart, both in a perpendicular and horizontal line. Plenty of good, clean, sharp sand on the floor is a good absorbant and healthy as well. But to breeders of Pouters and Pigmy Pouters this will not be suitable, for many a young Pouter has first acquired the habit of straddling by being placed upon a sanded floor. Breeders of Pouters, then, should have little of anything on the floor which will allow them to hold their feet on the boards or earthen floor. A little canary seed now and again is very nourishing and a great help to birds that are in moult, as well as a little flax seed for birds that color is a high point to obtain. Then a little iron in the drinking water is both healthful and conducive to good color in Reds and Yellows. Keep the young out of the direct rays of the sun and don't leave water before them all the time, but give them all they want three times a day, with a bath twice a week, and more you can't do for a successful moult. If the former is carried out you should have a very fair degree of success in moulting not only your young, but in the most approved manner as used by the more successful exhibitors on your old as well. Many can't give as much time as this requires, as their business does not allow of such, but they have to pay the penalty in either loss of birds or prizes, or both.

The proper feed for this season of the year is a good supply of Canada field peas, hard and sound, a little wheat, barley, and just a pinch of Kaffir corn, with a relish of canary, and if any signs of sticking in the moult, a little hemp seed.

From reports received there has been the greatest loss of young the past summer had for many years, owing, no doubt, to the extraordinary weather we have had. Still, there are a few good ones left, so that the young bird classes will not be empty by any means.

The American Tumbler Club is voting for its next meeting place, when there will no doubt be the largest and best lot of Tumblers shown so far got together in this country. We hear some of our Western friends are going to see if they can't divide the honors this year in the East, and we predict they will surprise some of the boys, for there are some grand Tumblers owned in the West and as good as any. Unfortunately, though, the Boston and Chicago shows come almost too close together for exhibitors to have the best of a chance to show at both, with no rest between. F. W. GORSE.

CARE OF THE STOCK.—For the last few months the young fancier's attention has been taken up with the breeding operations of his stock and the rearing of young ones, and to many this has been a trying and anxious time; but for the next month or two the birds will require even more care and attention than they have already done. During that period two most important events have to be prepared for, viz., the termination of the breeding operations, and consequently the separation of the sexes, and the casting and renewal of the plumage, or, as it is called, the "moult." With respect to the former the fixing of the date when it should take place is a subject on which there is much divergence of opinion, and the beginner is therefore sometimes at a loss to know when this most important operation should be commenced. A little thought on the subject—if his observations during the season have not brought the fact clearly to his mind—will show him that the operations of breeding, sitting and rearing young ones must have a great strain on the system, and that they should not be continued beyond a point that would endanger the health or even the very life of such stock, nor interfere with any other function. In determining this point or limit there are several things that must be taken into consideration, such as the time when breeding operations were commenced, the number of nests brought off, and the state of the weather. Of these the two former are somewhat closely connected, but it will be well to consider how many nests can be safely brought off, when a fairly correct estimate may be arrived at. In this, as in most things, experience is the best guide, and mine has been that five nests at the outside are all that can be expected from any pair of birds even when they are sturdy and well seasoned, while for first season birds one or two nests less might be nearer the mark. I know that more than this is often attempted, and at the time it may seem without any ill effects being produced, but it is afterwards that such effects become apparent, and shown by a sudden collapse in the moult, or when the cold weather sets in; while in other cases it may be found that such birds are altogether unfit to recommence breeding operations when the time for mating up again comes round.

When a very early start has been made breeding operations should have altogether ceased by this time, and many instances have been brought to my notice where this has been the case, but where a more reasonable course has been followed, and a later date of starting fixed, a little more latitude may be allowed. It would, however, be well to fix an approximate date, and this could be done by deciding on the end of the present month, and as it would be impossible to have all the pairs sitting at the same time it would be well to make a start as soon as possible, so that by the time fixed all would be finished. This may seem very hard when the early part of the season has resulted in a blank so far as young ones are concerned, and that the birds have just commenced to do well. Here it is that the young fancier is so apt to try just one more nest, with the idea of making up for his previous want of success; or, it may be, that a fresh nest is started before the young ones in the nest are out of hand, when he thinks that he will let them go on with this as well, with the result that the autumn is well advanced before the birds are separated, if a more sudden stoppage has not taken place through sickness or death. In the latter case, perhaps the best plan would be to remove the hen on the first indication of her going to nest again, and to let the cock bring up the young ones alone, supplemented, if necessary, by a little hand-feeding. If, however, the eggs are laid before this is done, it would be well to let them sit until the young ones are out of hand, and then to take them away and separate the old ones.

Another reason against prolonging the breeding season is that the stock birds will not commence moulting so soon as when they have been separated, and they will have to go through the process when the weather is not so suitable, or perhaps it may happen that they will start suddenly and cast a great number of feathers, leaving parts of the body quite bare, when they will become most susceptible to cold and disease, and probably will be found one morning dead in the nest or close beside it. In the interest of the young ones, too, it is necessary to finish breeding in good time, for they have the same process to go through, as well as to put on strength and development, and this will be found almost impossible if it has to be done in unsuitable weather, and if they survive the ordeal, it will be only at the expense of strength and vigor; neither are they likely to be of much use either for show or breeding purposes.—W. The Discouragements in Hare Breeding.

Editor American Fancier: When one takes up any new branch of live stock breeding he naturally seeks for instruction to guide him. In the specialty papers he will find columns of matter, important in its way, but he often looks in vain for the drawbacks and discouragements which fall to the lot of the inexperienced. The roseate glow of optimism is nearly all that is written. The particular stock is so hardy that disease is unknown and death impossible. The management is like that of an incubator—any child can do it. In fact, all is encouragement, and discouragements do not exist. The other side is not told, because some think it will hurt the business, and others are ashamed to make known their failures. But discouragements do exist, and the beginner will be painfully aware of them in his experience. I found it so when I began the breeding of hares. A few facts out of my early experience may prove helpful to others, or at least console them if it be true that "misery likes company."

"To begin at the beginning," my first purchase was of an adult buck, two adult does, and two young does. The day the hares arrived one of the young does died. For a time the old ones would not breed, but after awhile the litters began to come, and as it was cold weather some of them died, though every precaution that I knew of was taken. Still I was having success. But after awhile the young, now three or four months old, began to die. No cause was apparent. But I discovered that those which survived were nearly all bucks, and came to the conclusion that the young bucks had caused the death of the young does, and then the necessity of separating the sexes became apparent.

In a large hutch I placed four young bucks. One was a peculiarly fine specimen, one of the best colored I had ever seen, and by a long odds the best of the four. I found him paralyzed in his hinder parts one day, and he died. Out of another hutch containing two young bucks, the larger but not the better colored one died and the other made very little growth.

I bought a magnificent doe, bred to a fine buck. She produced a litter of nine fine young, began to eat them until she had reduced them to four and had destroyed one of the best reds I ever saw, when she broke her hind legs by stamping, died, and the rest of the litter soon followed her.

I bought another similar doe to take her place, bred to one of the finest bucks in the country. She made her nest at the date she was due to kindle, but she either never had a young one or ate all she had, for I never was able to find one. The doe, however, survived, and bred to one of my bucks produced a large litter, some of which survived.

At another time I bought a pair of high priced Flemish and a beautiful Red Belgian buck. The first night after their arrival the red buck was killed. The Flemish doe littered, was taken sick and died, and her young perished with her.

I bought a doe to take the place of the deceased Flemish, bred to a fine buck, but her time went by and no litter appeared.

Such are some of the discouragements which I have experienced. With a single exception I have never received stock which I thought was not worth the price paid. And without an exception I have never been able to rear a litter from a doe which I bought already bred. One doe, indeed, had a litter, but she lost them. In some cases I have nothing to show for my money but the pedigrees of the hares bought.

BUT, and write that "but" large, my experience on the whole has been profitable. My stock has increased in numbers and the quality has improved. I would not take several times the number of dollars I have paid for the stock now on hand. I have gained experience that is valuable and feel that some of the loss which I met would have been avoided had I known the danger; some of it is still mysterious and probably always will be. I have found the breeding of hares possesses the interest that always attaches to the breeding of any live stock when variability is a prominent factor, the interest that is inseparable from the chance for improvement. In other words, the hare is a creature possessing a plastic nature and is therefore suitable for a fancy and the fancier. While the enormous profits that some have made during the boom may never be realized again, there is still, despite the discouragements, a broad enough margin of profit to satisfy a reasonable man, and were there no profits at all a fancier might still find enough pleasure in the undertaking to warrant him in taking up and persisting in the breeding of this animal. The discouragements are real ones, but they are not different or greater than those which attach to any live stock. Breeders of thoroughbred poultry know that in this line of the fancy there are plenty of discouragements. But in hare breeding, as well as in breeding fine fowls, the encouragements are greater and more numerous than the discouragements, and so long as such a condition exists there is no just cause of hesitancy upon entering upon this pursuit and no adequate reason for abandoning it when once it is entered upon. It is perfectly legitimate to advise anyone, who has a suitable place and time to care for the stock, to begin the breeding of hares; but it is illegitimate to tempt him to undertake this pursuit by presenting it as one free from discouragements. Experience will teach him that the one who makes such representations is either a fool or a liar, and no one desires to obtain a reputation for either of these alternatives. Of a choice between such evils the best rule is to accept neither. The exact truth is sufficiently engaging to induce people to undertake the breeding of hares.

Are White Belgians Sports?

Editor American Fancier: As I was reading the American Fancier of Aug. 10th I was interested in Mr. Aug. D. Arnold's article in reply to Mr. Smith's in regard to the White Belgian Hare. I was at Denver last January judging the pigeons and when I got through with my work thought I would take in the Belgian Hare exhibit, and it was a good big one. There were over eight hundred on exhibition. One evening I had the pleasure of meeting and having a long talk on the hare with a very prominent breeder, also a first-class judge. In our talk I told him I had a very good doe, but she would throw solid blacks sometimes. He informed me that this was all right and the reason was that at first everyone bred for dark ticking, and to keep it dark enough they were crossed on black bucks to keep the ticking dark enough. Of course, that was all right. Then I asked: "How about white ones?" as I knew of a good doe belonging to Mrs. Troop, of Topeka, that threw three white ones. Then he told me his experience in that line. He said that when hares had such a boom in Denver everyone was breeding and raising all they could and they would use Belgian Hare bucks on white does (White English), and usually they would come pretty good Belgians and also have the Belgian Hare color. The way he found it out was some stock he sold was reported to have white young, so he went to work and traced it back in three or four cases and found out that after three or four generations they would throw whites and then they were called sports. He said he did not think there was any White Belgians, and it looked reasonable.

Now, I do not set myself up as an authority, but give my experience, and would like to hear what others say about it. I am glad that some are breeding the white hares, and if they are sports they can be bred so as to breed true to color and have the hare shape, making another breed and helping the fancy along. J. P. LUCAS.

Floors for Poultry Houses.

A Middleburg, Md., writer in the Practical Farmer says: "After trying different kinds of floors in my poultry and brooder houses I have discarded board floors on account of being rat harbors and hard to keep clean, cement floors being very cold, and both rather expensive. I now use a floor made of good, sharp sand and lime, making a well mixed mortar, using plenty of lime. It is entirely satisfactory and very cheap. I have one that has been used daily for six years and is as good as when first made, except a hole the hens ate in it last winter when they were snowed in for several months and the oyster shell got a little low. If they had eaten it all the loss would have been light; as it is, the hole can be patched in less than ten minutes. The beauty of this floor is, anybody can mix the mud and lay it himself, the only outlay being a few cents for lime. If he has no trowel a shingle or a flat shovel will do to lay it with.

The Sprague Publishing Company, Detroit, Michigan, publishers of "The American Boy," have filed a formal request with the management of the St. Louis Exposition that a boys' building be made one of the features of the World's Exposition for 1903. They are backing up this request by every means possible, and they ask for the support in this undertaking of the boys and their friends. In general, the plan is to have a building that shall accommodate exhibits of boy invention and enterprise, and shall have an assembly hall in which there may be a boys' congress, conventions of men and women workers in behalf of boys, and meetings of associations of amateurs, state and national. The project is a unique one and, if carried through, will add greatly to the popular interest in the Exposition.

MOUNTAINSIDE LOFTS AND BANTAM Yards, Mahwah, N. J., Havemeyer Bros, Proprietors.—To parties on the lookout for exhibition stock for the coming fall shows in Game and Variety Bantams, we have to announce that, having had a successful season, we are prepared to supply their requirements in either young or old stock and of the kind that can hold their own in the hottest competition. In a recent article from the pen of A. E. Blunck of Johnstown, N. Y., published in the American Fancier, he stated that when showing against stock from Mountain Side, he knew he was "up against the real thing." Enough said. Why buy elsewhere when such an authority tells you where you can get "the real thing?" Our prices are reasonable in accordance with quality. The "real thing" is always cheap. Anything but the "real thing" in Bantams is dear at any price. All inquiries for stock should be addressed to the Manager, JOHN GLASGOW. 14-21

A. E. BLUNCK, Johnstown, N. Y., offers for the first time, eggs from his rare bantams. 50 cents each for varieties Game Bantam eggs. Golden and Silver Sebright eggs, $3 for 13; Black White and Buff Cochin Bantam eggs, $4 for 13. 97-tf die by being lousy than from any other cause. You can talk about improper care and food, lack of green food and grit, but, when looking for the root of the trouble look for lice, and when you find them look into the merits of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies. Rev. H. H. Purrington, Mt. Vernon, Maine, writes: "We all use Death to Lice and find it most satisfactory." The Norton Poultry Yards, Dallas, Texas, writes: "We have been using your Death to Lice for the past four years and it has given entire satisfaction."

MORE CHICKENS

have head lice than most poultry keepers realize. Some think that these little pests are pin feathers on the top of a chicks' head and do not take the trouble to examine them closely until the broods begin to die off. One Massachusetts fancier says that it cost him hundreds of dollars to learn this. Death to Lice Ointment is made especially for the extermination of these little blood suckers, without injury to the little chicks. 100 doses 10c postpaid.

MORE CHICKENS

than should go into two coops are often crowded into one. The lice will then crowd into these small quarters and assist to make the nights long, hot and miserable. The little mites or spider lice crawl out of the cracks and crevices and extract more blood from the chicks than they can make during the day. Charles L. Evans, Wood River, Neb., writes: "I have given your 'special' a thorough trial. I had a hen-house that was polluted with mites. I mixed one (four) ounce box of special to one gallon of whitewash and gave it a thorough whitewashing. I now defy anyone to find a louse about my hen house."

MORE CHICKENS

properly cared for mean more money. Proper care means a liberal use of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies as well as suitable food and housing. No poultry keeper ever failed because he put too much money into Death to Lice. Many do fail because they do not keep their flocks free from vermin. The most successful money-making poulterers are those who use the most Lamberts. We have remedies for all kinds of lice, on anything and everything. We put it up in all sizes of packages to suit all kinds of people. We have all kinds of good testimonials as to its efficacy.

PRICE LIST.

Gentlemen:-Your Orr's Liquid Lice Killer, with Sprayer and Brush, to hand, and after giving it a thorough test, must admit the truth of all the statements made by you in your advertisement in the American Fancier.

It kills the lice and the mites, and does not harm the bird.

Please inform us as to an agency; we desire to become agents for Lebanon and Schuylkill Counties.

Yours very truly,

AT THE IMPERIAL SHOW OF THE NATION—
MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, N. Y., THE WORLD'S RECORD OF

E. B. THOMPSON'S BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS

4 YEARS IN SUCCESSION was the most remarkable ever achieved in the realm of poultry exhibitions. This record is by many points the highest ever accomplished in the annals of the New York Show; Winning during 4 years in succession MORE THAN THREE TIMES AS MANY 1ST PRIZES as any other exhibitor, and as many 1ST PRIZES as ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED, besides more than twice as many Cups and Specials as all, including the superb challenge Trophy, value $100. for best cock, cockerel, hen, pullet and exhibition pen; $100 Sterling Silver Cup for finest exhibit, Grand Special Prize Sweepstakes Cup value $100 presented by the President for best P. Rock cock, cockerel, hen, and pullet, any variety. My clean sweep of on pullets has never been approached in Madison Square Garden, and stands alone and unequaled.

The world's record of 1st on exhibition pen at New York 3 years in succession is the undisputed Champion. With their 1900 record the "RINGLETS" have won at New York a grand total of 77 PRIZES, 31 of these prizes are 1st and specials, being 17 more 1st and special prizes than won by any competitor in the history of the show. Rare bargains in yearling breeders in lots of a trio or 100. Show bird fit to win in the fastest company. Richly illustrated 24 page catalogue on application. Elegant breeders in any number. Eggs from finest exhibition matings, 1 sitting, $5; 2 sittings, $9; 3 sittings, $12; 4 sittings, $15. ADDRESS 91-tf

"Profitable Poultry Keeping in All its Branches."

This is the title of the new and elegant Catalogue issued by the Cyphers Incubator Co., for 1901. It contains 224 pages, 8x11 inches in size, over 200 fine new half-tone illustrations and a wealth of interesting, down-to-date matter, covering the subject of Poultry for Profit in all its branches.

This is a Brand New Book,

not a re-hash of old ones. Contains special articles written by experts, and illustrates and describes over fifty of America's largest and most successful Duck, Broiler, Roaster and Egg Farms. It also contains the endorsements of over one hundred of the foremost breeders of this country—men and women who are using the Cyphers Incubators—and shows photographic views of many of their poultry plants and favorite poultry houses. MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

From the Editor's Perch.

The Cleveland show management is simply beating all records in advance advertising for its big exhibition to be held December 4 to 11. The latter promises to be a model affair, as the officers are well known business men of Cleveland, who have had experience in conducting such a large show. The judging will be by the score card, sufficient judges having been engaged to complete the placing of the awards the first day.

Dr. S. T. Lea, Hodges, S. C., writes us that he has been compelled to refuse five or six shows this coming winter owing to his inability to leave his practise for any length of time. The doctor is deservedly one of the most popular judges in the South.

"Alf" Bertling will again be in charge of the poultry department at the Southern Inter-State Fair, Atlanta, Ga., October 14 to 19. No better choice could be made, and exhibitors can rest assured that they and their birds will be well taken care of. Premium lists for this great show can be had by addressing T. H. Martin, secretary, Atlanta, Ga.

Gov. John L. Cost writes us that there will be an avalanche of Belgian Hares exhibited at Hagerstown, one exhibitor alone sending over one hundred entries. They will have a special building, with two men to watch and care for them. The governor also informs us that over 1,000 entries in poultry are already made.

The premium list of the Hagerstown show is at hand and presents the usual liberal and tempting array of premiums. Those who have not received a copy should send at once to John L. Cost and get in line for Hagerstown and take advantage of the special trip to the Pan-American from Hagerstown. This will be a personally conducted tour by John L. Cost.

Premium lists for the poultry, pigeon and pet stock show at the Pan-American have been mailed to exhibitors. Those who have not received a copy should send at once to George H. Burgott, superintendent poultry, Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, New York. Entries close September 14.

Mr. Burgott informs us that quite a number of entries have already been made and from letters received there will be birds on exhibition representing nearly every State in the Union and the Dominion of Canada.

H. V. Crawford, secretary of the New York poultry show, has been a visitor at the Pan and spent several days with Mr. Burgott in looking the ground over. Mr. Crawford is an exceedingly able executive officer, and as his advice on poultry show management is of considerable value, "Pan" Burgott certainly was the gainer.

The Danbury Fair is the great institution of the Nutmeg State. Danbury, Connecticut, annually in October is the Mecca for thousands of people, including dog and chicken fanciers. Special inducements have been offered to poultry exhibitors this season, and as the "chicken show" has been put on an up-to-date standard, the entries should be large. Premium lists can be obtained by addressing G. M. Rundle, secretary, Danbury, Conn.

Mr. A. F. Cooper, of the Prairie State Incubator Co., will sail for Europe September 15, and expects to spend several months on the other side of the pond. It is also stated that H V. Russ is going along with Cooper to teach him how to keep from getting seasick. Russ is an old sailor and expects to get a lot of fun out of the triais and tribulations of the aforesaid Cooper. We are inclined to think that Capt. Russ will be disappointed, as Midshipman Cooper has been practising on the Monongahela River for the past six months and thinks he is ready to stand "any old" blow on the Atlantic. At all events, we wish the pair of mariners a safe and pleasant voyage both ways.

We learn that Mr. A. F. Hunter, erstwhile editor of Farm-Poultry, has been engaged to write exclusively for the Reliable Poultry Journal.

Mr. George A. Pollard, we understand, has resigned his position with the Cyphers Incubator Co. and accepted a very handsome offer from Mr. Lawson, the copper king, to manage and superintend his stock farm.

Miss Fanny Piggott, proprietress of the Poultry Keeper, Quincy, Ill., is on an eastern trip in the interest of her new charge. Miss Piggott was quite a factor in the success of the Reliable Poultry Journal, and we trust will be equally successful with the Poultry Keeper. The latter will be edited, as in the past, by "the only" Patrick Henry Jacobs.

T. E. Orr having retired from The National Stockman and Farmer that he may have a more active outdoor life, is open to a few engagements to judge live stock and poultry. An intimate lifetime acquaintance with fine wool sheep and fancy poultry and fifteen years study of other classes of live stock as shown at leading fairs, fit him well for such a position. He may be addressed at 539 Liberty St., Pittsburg, or in care of this office.—National Stockman and Farmer.

We heartily endorse the above. Mr. Orr is a conscientious and able man, who is devoted to his profession. We wish him success and improved health in his new vocation.

Mr. C. J. Ross, the hustling eastern representative of Commercial Poultry. has been working up the poultry plants of New England for the past two weeks.

Theodore Hewes, of the Reliable Poultry Journal editorial staff, has also been on an eastern trip, but it is rumored that "Big Theo" is going back to Chicago for the Cyphers Incubator Company.

"As others see us" is not always flattering and then again it is very gratifying to have the unbiased opinion of a disinterested observer on one's faults or virtues as the case may be. The same applies to the opinion on birds expressed by others. We therefore take pleasure in clipping the following handsome editorial comment found in the English Stock-Keeper of August 16th:

"Amongst the many strong yards of Plymouth Rocks which abound in America that of Mr. C. H. Welles of Connecticut, U. S. A., occupies a very prominent position. The Welleslea yards are situated in a charming sylvan spot well removed from the hurry and bustle of the world outside, and approached by a lovely road which commands a splendid view of the river Housatonic, which winds its way by cliff and wood until it is lost to sight in the Sound. Mr. Welles' home is a most attractive spot, and his fine old house—wood built on stone foundations as is the prevailing pattern in America—has sheltered four generations of his family from the storms of over a hundred winters, and looks like going on throughout another century at least. Here a most hearty welcome awaited the fancier who sends us the account of the yard and who writes in the most enthusiastic terms regarding the kindness he received from every member of Mr. Welles' family. The seven poultry houses vary in size from 20 feet by 14 feet to 50 feet by 15 feet, one of the latter, which is two stories high, being used for getting birds up for show. The runs average about 60 feet by 15 feet, and are on a hillside, being well gravelled, and are frequently raked over to prevent their becoming tainted. In addition to the large houses there are eighteen breeding yards, all of which are devoted to Barred Plymouth Rocks; each male bird with his hens are rigorously confined to these during the season, whilst a most elaborate system of recording results and identifying chickens is in vogue. About a couple of hundred yards away from the main buildings is a meadow in which the coops are situated, not less than five hundred being on view at the time of the visit, the young birds' welfare and comfort being immeasurably enhanced by the large and varied supply of insect life which here, as in most parts of America, is most abundant. Our correspondent was much struck by the even quality of Mr. Welles' Rocks, the ground color and barring being wonderfully even, though in some cases a few of the hens appeared to him to be a trifle light in color Some of the cocks were gigantic birds, but all were compact and first-rate in eye, head and general type. This is not at all surprising when it is remembered that the Welleslea Barred Rocks have vindicated the form of the yard they represent all over America. Their latest record at the New York Show is wonderful, for they won first and third for old cocks; first and second for hens; second, third, fourth and fifth for cockerels; first, second and third for pullets, and first, second and fourth in pens, also the gold medal for the best Plymouth Rock raised in 1899, the silver cup, value £20, for the best group, cock, hen, cockerel and pullet, the challenge cup, the breeding yard cup, value £20, and the diploma for the largest and best display, from which it will be seen that the claim of Mr. Welles to be considered the leading Barred Plymouth Rock breeder of America is at all events based upon a very substantial foundation."

The above is an unsolicited testimonial of the true worth of "Charley" Welles' Rocks and while distance lends enchantment, the above comments are far more correct and honest than many of the fulsome and flattering reports of visiting experts (?) to the yards of breeders of fowls in this country.

This reminds us of the fact that write-ups can be procured and published in poultry papers for "a consideration." A good stiff advertiser has the pole and the field is distanced. The records of the winner, if in the field, are never published. Why? The answer is obvious.

Bulletin No. 29, issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Animal Industry, D. E. Salmon, D.V.M., chief, is labelled "American Breeds of Fowls," the first of which is "The Plymouth Rock," by T. F. McGrew. This is a book of 32 pages, and shows a careful research by Mr. McGrew as to the origin, mating and breeding of America's popular fowl. The book is illustrated with colored plates, which, according to Mr. Salmon, "have received the approval of some of the most skilful breeders of these fowls." This bulletin is sent to all who send fifteen cents to the department at Washington. As all such bulletins are usually sent free to farmers, we see no reason why the United States Government should exact a tribute from poultry breeders. It is not a publishing or printing office for poultry literature, even if it does take away all the profit of the poor printers by printing envelopes for a dollar a thousand less than first-class offices are in the habit of charging.

Young Turkeys.

After young turkeys have passed the danger period they are then very hardy and will take care of themselves with but little assistance. They are naturally great foragers and are therefore liable to destruction from dogs, foxes and other enemies. They will always prefer high roosting places, and in alighting therefrom they sometimes become lame. Even when well advanced in growth they sometimes succumb to the attacks of the large gray lice, which are found under the wings and on the skin of the heads and necks. The remedy is to apply a little melted lard, as grease of any kind will destroy the lice, but if too much is used it will also injure the young turkeys. An occasional dusting with insect powder will also be found beneficial.—Philadelphia Record.

—Pigeon men and hen men should push the American Fancier. Advertisers claim they get better results than from any other paper.

Faverolles.

REASONS FOR KEEPING FAVEROLLES.

It has often been said that we live in an age of small joints, little birds, and French knick-knacks. The huge dish which used to appear, first as a roast, then cold, and then in that unknown quantity commonly called a hash, has disappeared before something fresh every day. What is wanted, then, in this twentieth century is a chicken that is easy to rear, quick to grow, and yet has tender and juicy flesh. Will Faverolles do this? Mr. T. R. Robinson, F. S. I., the noted English Faverolle breeder, claims they will, for although as old birds they are undoubtedly more or less coarse like all birds having Asiatic blood, yet when young they will attain a size and weight with less trouble than some of our finer breeds, and a young fowl of this breed will leave nothing in the way of quality to be desired.

WHAT IS A FAVEROLLE?

In France the Faverolle answers to what the Surrey or Sussex bird does in England. It makes the highest price in the Parisian markets and has quite displaced other breeds. It has been bred by a people whose sole object has been to make a profit. A Faverolle makes no pretense of being of a pure breed. It is the outcome of two distinct processes, i. e., careful crossing and liberal feeding. We find the Houdan, Dorking, Brahma and Cochin a mixture of all four represented in one bird. It must be borne in mind that the country people care nothing about color and markings. What they want is something that will come to the market quick, that will, if required, stand the confinement of a fatting coop, or that when mature will make a good forager, and will be a fair layer of good sized tinted eggs.

FAVEROLLES AS THEY ARE BRED.

The Houdan gives them their chief characteristics—the whiskers and small beard. The Dorking is especially noticed in the male, as seen by the pinkish white legs, four or five toes, black breast and the single comb. The Brahma or Cochin generally leaves traces of feathers down the leg, is responsible for the brown egg of the hen, and often for the color and general carriage of the bird. Although breeding for feather has not been studied by the original producers, yet the different and more or less systematic ways of producing these birds have brought into existence several types. Thus we have the Faverolle-Dorking or Faverolle-Sammon or Salmon as they are called in England, specimens of which have recently been imported to the States by Valley Farm, of Simsbury, Ct. These make splendid table birds. The Faverolle-Brahma is also very popular and is marked similar to the Light Brahma. There is also the black, which owes its origin partly to the Langshan, and the Faverolle-Coucon, which may have a cross of Coucon de Malines or Plymouth Rock. Our preference lies rather with the Salmon-Faverolle, although perhaps not quite such a great layer as some of the other varieties. We think they come rather sooner to a marketable condition.

The following records of weights are taken from experiments carried out in the spring of 1897 by Monsieur Grange at the Gambais, France, School of Poultry Culture, and have since been published in La Revue Avicole. The figures refer to grammes and kilogrammes and are the average of the whole group:

Age.	Average.	Weight one picked specimen.
1 month....	0.185	0.290
6 weeks....	0.450	0.625
2 months...	0.785	1.050
3 months...	1.800	2.000

JOSEPH B. THOMAS, JUNR.

CRANGLE ON FAVEROLLES.

THE QUEENS OF UTILITY POULTRY.

The recent importations of Faverolles by Mr. Joseph B. Thomas, Junr., for his Valley Farm at Simsbury, Ct., has brought into prominence this new French breed. The Faverolles have the advantage over others in being prolific layers of beautiful sized eggs, which average twenty four ounces to the dozen. The color of the shell would be classed as pale or very light brown, and in addition to this they are handsome eggs. The fowls are large in size, heavy and plump, with very long, full breast, which carries considerable of white meat.

There are several types as well as color—the Faverolle-Concou (like the Colored Dominique), Faverolle-Dorking and the Faverolle-Brahma. Each of these are colored like the fowls whose names they bear. Those selected by Mr. Thomas are known in England as Salmon Faverolles. The male resembles the Silver Grey Dorking in color, shape and size. Faverolles have five toes, short legs, shanks of a pinkish white color, much like the Houdans and Dorkings, low set, very heavy bodies. They are active foragers and give good return for food fed.

Having been formed by the union of Houdans, Dorkings and Asiatics, they combine the good qualities of all these, gained under the careful guidance of those who originated them, whose sole object in their production is for gain.

The Salmon Faverolles at Valley Farm have established themselves par excellence as egg producers. Soon after making their long voyage they settled to work and the hens have layed continually. The eggs are proving to be fully up to the average of others in fertility and the chicks are strong and vigorous.

Mr. Thomas has other importations on the way and will continue to import from time to time as many good specimens as he can secure. Those already sent to Mr. Thomas' Valley Farm have in their number first cockerel at Paris, first cock at Crystal Palace, London; first and third hens at Crystal Palace. London. In these, as with all other stock at Valley Farm, quality stands above all. J. F. CRANGLE, Manager.

Since writing the above, Mr. T. F. McGrew, of New York City, has spent several days at Valley Farm. Below is given his opinion of the Faverolles:

Mr. J. B. THOMAS, JR.

Dear Sir: You are certainly very fortunate in securing such qualrty in Faverolles. It is quite unusual for one to obtain birds of such note as those I saw at Valley Farm; above all this to me, is the fact that while I was there each hen laid an egg every one of the three days, twelve of these eggs weighing twenty-four ounces. In handling these fowls, I was wonderfully pleased with size, shape, and beauty of skin and flesh. No one who understands poultry can have any possible doubt as to their taking a strong position among the most popular fowls of the day.

Respectfully.

(Signed), T. F. MCGREW.

THE AUTHORIZED STANDARD OF SALMON FAVEROLLES.

Prepared by the Faverolles Club, November, 1900, R. Applegarth, president, Cromwell Lodge, Bexley, Kent; T. R. Robinson, honorable secretary, Southeastern Agricultural College, Wye, Kent.

GENERAL CHARACTERISTICS.

Cock.

Comb—Upright, single, medium size, four to six neat serrations free from coarseness or any side work.
Wattles—Small, fine in texture.
Beak—Stout and short.
Head—Broad, flat and short, free from crest.
Neck—Short and thick, especially near the body, into which it should be well let in.
Back—Flat, square, very broad across the shoulders and saddle, and of fair length. The back of the hen is longer than in the cock.
Breast—Broad, keel bone very deep and coming well forward in front, but not too rounded. A hollow breast very objectionable.
Sides—Deep.
Wings—Prominent in front but small and carried closely tucked to body.
Body—Thick, deep and cloddy.
Tail—Feathers and sickles stout, medium length. A flowing tail carried low or straight objectionable.
Thighs—Short, wide apart, plenty of body between them.
Shanks—Medium length and stout, straight, slightly feathered down to outer toe, knees straight, carried well apart, narrowness or tendency to be in-kneed very objectionable.
Toes—Five, the fifth toe totally separate from the fourth.

Hen.

Comb—Similar to the cock, but much smaller and very neat, fine in texture.
Neck—Short and full, carried straighter than in the cock.
Back—Broad and flat, longer than in the cock.
Breast—Deep, full and prominent, knee bone longer than in cock.
Body—Generally longer and deeper than in the cock.
Tail—Fan-shaped, feathers broad, stout and medium length carried midway between upright and drooping.

POINTS AND COLOR.

Cock.

Beak—Horn or white.
Face, Lobes and Wattles—Red, both partially concealed by muffing.
Beard and Muffing—Full, but the beard should be short, black, ticked with white.
Hackles—Straw.
Back and Shoulders—A mixture of black, white and brown.
Breast—Black.
Wings—As in Duckwing Game, the wingbow straw, the wingbar black, and the secondaries showing white on the outside.
Thighs and Under Fluff—As black as possible.
Legs and Feet—White.
Carriage—Active and alert.

Hen.

Beak, Face, Lobes, Wattles, Legs and Feet.—Same as cock
Beard and Muffing—Creamy white.
Head and Neck Hackle—Wheaten brown, striped with same color of darker shade.
Back and Shoulders—Wheaten brown.
Wings—Similar to back, but the colors are softer and lighter. Primaries and secondaries wheaten brown.
Breast, Thighs and Fluff—Cream.
Tail—Wheaten brown.
Weights—Cock, 7 to 8½ pounds; hen, 6 to 7 pounds; cockerels, 6½ to 7½ pounds; pullets, 5 to 6½ pounds.

Washington, D. C.

Editor American Fancier: Things for the first annual exhibition of the Washington Poultry, Pigeon and Belgian Hare Association, which will be held the week of November 19 to 23, 1901, at Masonic Temple, corner Ninth and F streets, N. W., are looking exceedingly bright, and the prospects are that the event will be the best of its kind ever held in the Capitol city. The association was organized this year with a membership limited to thirty, which embraces fanciers of poultry, pigeons and Belgian Hares. The members are hustling around at a lively rate, knowing full well that the success of the show depends upon the individual and united efforts. It will be the first time that Belgian Hares have ever been exhibited in Washington, and an effort is being made to make this portion of the show a most successful feature. They have only lately been introduced to the general public of the District of Columbia, and they seem to have taken a permanent hold, a large number of breeders having embarked in the business. The poultry part is an assured success and a good showing is guaranteed. Considerable interest is manifested by the breeders of the surrounding states, and it seems certain that all classes will be well filled. Particular attention will be paid to this part of the show, which, being the largest, will also be the most important. In the pigeon exhibit the display will be the largest ever known in Washington. The pigeon fanciers are numerous and extremely energetic. Practically the same classification will be observed as will be used at the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo. From the men alone over 500 exhibits of all varieties are guaranteed. It is possible that there will be a class for best flown Homers, such a class being seriously considered. If this is not adopted, a Homer exhibit will most likely be held, and just before or perhaps during the show a fly will be held, to the winners of which prizes in cash will be awarded. The premium list of the show will make its appearance about September 15th. It will contain about 100 pages and the classification of the different exhibits, advertisements of the different business houses, besides the general announcements and rules. It will be an excellent specimen of the typographical art. An edition of 3,500 copies will be issued and scattered all over the eastern section. It is expected that about 300 specials, a good portion of which will be cash, will be offered. Below are a full list of the judges: Poultry, Thomas F. McGrew, A. E. Warner, Geo. O. Brown; Pigeons, C. The Panama Canal.

PRESENT intimate commercial relations between the United States and the Republic of Columbia will probably result in the former securing and finishing the Panama Canal. Long headed capitalists, appreciating the wonderful natural resources of Columbia are investing in everything there. English capitalists are working coal, iron and gold mines. American capitalists are developing mining, railroad, steamship, rubber, coffee, cotton, timber, colonial and grazing enterprises. Many of the strongest and best known capitalists of Boston, New York and Chicago have invested in some of them. Among them may be mentioned T. Jefferson Coolidge, Fred L. Ames, Oliver Ames, John L. Gardner, Albert W. Nickerson, J. Murray Forbes, Wm. H. Forbes, W. Powell Mason, Lawrence Minot, Joseph S. Fay, Jr., Henry D. Hyde, George V. L. Meyer, Henry Parkman, Allan Curtis, Thos. R. Bright, are interested, controls nineteen rich copper concessions of about 107 acres each, making something over a hundred ordinary mining claims, together with timber, coal and limestone properties and water rights and water powers there.

Of these concessions the Consul General of Columbia at New York says:

"I do know that in the districts where they are located copper is found in very great abundance, and I have no doubt myself that these mining concessions will prove very rich in that metal upon being properly equipped and worked.

Columbia is a great mineral storehouse, which heretofore has been third in the production of gold and a very large producer of silver, but in the struggle for these precious metals the vast copper deposits have remained undeveloped. I am glad, as I know every Columbian will be, to see American and English capital now seeking these rich fields, for I am sure that investments could not be made anywhere with prospects for greater and more certain returns to capital than in the above region, which I believe will quickly develop into one of the greatest copper producing fields in the world."

Weights of Colored Dorkings

Editor American Fancier: On August 14th I weighed a Colored Dorking pullet. She was then five months old and weighed 6 lbs. Probably had July not been a month of such excessive heat, she would have made a still better weight, as the chickens gain little, I think, when it goes to 112 in the shade. Like people, they eat very little in great heat, and unless a young animal or bird consumes a great deal it cannot make rapid growth.

Just before weighing the pullet I weighed a Colored Dorking hen. She had raised a brood, laid again, and was beginning to set. She was, of course, in poor condition, but weighed about 8 lbs. I suppose it would be no exaggeration to say she would weigh 9 lbs. in show condition. The Standard gives the weight at 7 lbs., but does any breeder consider this a true estimate of the size of the breed? Would any breeder be willing to give a long price for an adult hen that in show condition weighed only 7 lbs. or cock of 9 lbs., no matter how good they might be in other points? In my flock, if a hen after its first mature moult, being then about 16 or 17 months old, does not weigh 8 lbs. I kill it, considering it too small to breed from.

According to the Standard, Indian Games weigh only ½ lb. less than Colored Dorkings in adult birds. I am breeding both, but I have not succeeded in buying or raising Indians that would weigh within ½ lb. of my Dorkings, though I do not consider mine to be by any means exceptional birds. I consider the average weights of Colored Dorkings in show condition should be: Cock, 10½ lbs.; hen, 8 lbs. Under these weights they are too small to breed from and certainly are by no means show birds. I should like to hear what other breeders think.

John L. Cost to Exhibitors of Poultry and Pigeons.

It is a recognized fact that one of the very best advertising mediums for poultry raisers is to exhibit their stock at a poultry show of good standing—such as Hagerstown. No matter whether their exhibits win or not, the fact remains that their owner was not afraid to put them to the test. Visitors sometimes prefer specimens that are not winners, and often when they see so little difference between the winners and some others, they do not hesitate to make purchases. An exhibit at one Hagerstown show may give an exhibitor more prestige or notoriety than months of more costly advertising. The fact that your birds have been exhibited at Hagerstown is one of the very best points you can make when you do advertise.

The Hagerstown show has become an educational medium for poultrymen. There have been many graduates from the Hagerstown poultry school who have won the highest honors at the leading poultry shows of the country. Their first encouragement and start was given them at Hagerstown.

This year may be your great opportunity. Possibly some of the prominent breeders who have heretofore been at Hagerstown will go to Buffalo's Pan-American Exposition instead. If they do, it will be a great chance for breeders who have been timid heretofore about showing in strong competition. These timid breeders often have birds that could readily win, even in strong competition. Many an old time breeder has been "knocked out" by a nervy novice. Come to Hagerstown this year and bring your birds. Show up your hand in the poultry line. The live poultryman takes advantage of every opportunity, and he is always hunting around for opportunities, too.

An exhibit at Hagerstown may prove to be the best investment you ever made in the poultry business. Don't hesitate and get left, but get in the ranks of the progressive poultrymen by sending your birds to Hagerstown. Come with them if you can, but remember, if you cannot come, your birds will be properly cared for anyway.

Yours respectfully,

JOHN L. COST.

THE HOME OF FOWLS, TURKEYS, PONIES, HOUNDS AND HARE OF UNUSUAL QUALITY.

Having received such generous treatment at the hands of our host on the occasion of the opening of Valley Farm, the 22nd of February last, it gave me a longing to return to the hills of Connecticut ever since, a pleasure that came rather as a surprise the other day. Business called me East, and an invitation over the 'phone to meet Mr. Crangle at West Hartford gave me the opportunity to have a drive over the mountains to Valley Farm.

I could scarcely tell in several pages of all the kind treatment, good meals and beautiful drives revelled in, but we all know full well that when true fanciers meet there is nothing equals the pleasant hours spent in going over the past and planning for the future.

Quality is blazoned on every doorpost at Valley Farm. A few of the very best have the post of honor in the beautifully appointed hen houses; only the eggs from these few have been set the past season. Of the young stock seen at Valley Farm, I must say they were the best Barred and White Plymouth Rocks I have seen this season.

FRENCH BREEDS.

Mr. Thomas has always had the greatest interest in Houdans; of this breed no one has better than he has at Valley Farm. They are of the true Houdan type and color. This love for the quality of the French fowls has guided him in his selecting of the new French breed for a position at Valley Farm.

The new breed selected are the Salmon Faverolles, the largest production of French art in the line of new poultry. They are bred in several varieties, all of which are called after the fowls whose color they have—as, for instance, one kind is called Faverolle-Brahma, having the color of the Brahma. The Faverolles at Valley Farm are of the variety that are called Salmon Faverolles in England, the females being salmon in color. The color of neck, back and saddle is darker than the breast and under body color; the plumage of neck, back and saddle is laced with lighter color. Several have won high prizes at Paris and the Crystal Palace, London. They all show evidence of being the best of their kind. They are of large size, shaped quite like the Dorking, have short legs, full plump bodies, some feathers on their shanks, and a beard. They are evidently great egg producers. The three days of my visit there four hens in one pen laid twelve eggs, one for each hen each day, a record they have almost equalled since they began to lay. We may fully believe that in these new fowls Mr. Thomas has added importance to his flock, and in addition to this he has made it possible for every one to know the real value of this fowl that has gained so strong a hold on the other side as profitable poultry. When the breeders of Sussex turn from the long tried varieties to consider the possibilities of this new French breed we may feel assured of its quality as well as of its ability to give the best returns as market poultry and egg producers.

Big Show at Burlington, Iowa.

Burlington, Iowa, Aug. 23d.—If last night's meeting is to be taken as an indication of what the future will bring, it is safe to predict that ere the snow flies, Burlington and Des Moines county will have one of the largest and best Poultry and Pet Stock Associations in the west. The attendance for the opening meeting was phenomenal, and everyone was deeply interested in the project, which may be regarded as the first one of the good results to be brought about by the resurrection of the Des Moines county fair.

A few days ago a call for a meeting of owners of fine poultry and pet stock was published. Pet stock includes dogs, cats, Belgian hares, pigeons, etc. In response to this call the following met at the Commercial Exchange rooms last night and signed the charter of the new organization, to be known as the Burlington Poultry and Pet Stock Association: Ed Marquardt, John A. Dehner, John Franken, W. G. Rockenbrod, C. Keegan, F. W. Buser, Charles Yaekel, George E. Wahl, C. M. Daniels, Wm. Schaefer, A. E. Dreier, John Hill, H. Buser, Carl Plock, F. J. Hoelzen, E. G. Fichtner, J. Trehanna, C. F. Flad, S. H. Reppert, E. O. Schlachter, Ed Schlachter, C. M. Hyskell, B. Schick, J. I. King, A. H. Meinberg, Wm. Hawkins, J. A. Hanna, A. F. Hertzler, Louis Blaul, Al Simon, J. G. Green, Mrs. J. G. Green.

The meeting was organized by calling C. M. Hyskell to the chair, while A. E. Dreier acted as secretary. Messrs. John Dehner, Ed Marquardt, Will Rockenbrod and Christy Keegan made short addresses, stating the object of the meeting and pointing out the benefits of organization. The motion to effect a permanent association was carried without a dissenting voice, and the election of officers resulted as follows: President, Ed Marquardt; vice-president, Will Rockenbrod; secretary-treasurer, John A. Dehner; executive committee, Ed Marquardt, Will Rockenbrod, J. A. Dehner, C. M. Hyskell, Fred. Buser, Christy Keegan, H. Buser.

On motion of John Dehner the organization adopted the name of the Burlington Poultry and Pet Stock Association.

Meetings will be held monthly or oftener if deemed necessary. The members are of the opinion that it will require little effort to bring the membership up to and above one hundred.

After completing the organization and filling the ranks, the work of organizing a fine poultry and pet stock show, to be held some time during the winter, will be taken in hand. There seems no doubt that the association will prove a benefit not merely to the members, but to our city and county, and the Hawk-Eye wishes the new organization the very best of success.

To the Members of the Club and Breeders of Buff Plymouth Rocks.

It is anticipated that the poultry exhibit at the Pan-American will be a large and most interesting one, as will be noticed in the premium list, many of the largest specialty clubs will hold a meeting during the time of the show. Ours will be held at 2 p. m., Thursday, October 24th, at which time we hope all who can will attend. Pursuing our liberal custom as in the past and desiring to have a strong competition, the officers of the Club have decided to offer the following special premiums, to be competed for by members of the Club only: Silver medal for best cock, hen, cockerel and pullet, by one exhibitor; silver medal for best cock; silver medal for best hen; silver medal for best cockerel; silver medal for best pullet; silver medal for best pen; bronze medal for best shaped male; bronze medal for best shaped female; bronze medal for best surface colored male; bronze medal for best surface colored female; bronze medal for best male with best head; bronze medal for best female with best head.

It is hoped that these valuable specials, in addition to the liberal premiums open to all, offered by the officers of the Pan-American, will have the desired result in bringing out former exhibitors as well as many new ones. Breeders and fanciers who are not members of the Club are cordially invited to join. Send application at once, together with $1 membership fee and $1 annual dues to

ONE OF THE THREE BEST.

The American Fancier ranks as one of our three best mediums, and we will continue with you indefinitely.

M F. DELANO,

President Millville Poultry Farm Co., Millville, N. J.

Howell's Reflections.

Editor American Fancier: This town is quiet, believe me; it is one of the most quiet places in the universe at present. The inhabitants have taken vacations of their own free will or been "tipped off." The few unfortunates left, like myself, spend their time in reflection and solitude.

Upon receiving this week's American Fancier I read the able article on how the poultry at Elm Farm are not fed, from the pen of T. F. McGrew, and I began to reflect. My first reflection was that 1297 Broadway is only a half dozen blocks down the street from the "Florodora" chorus, where they sing, "Can you tell me," etc.

My next reflection was that the wheat screenings in those old hoppers must get to be rather monotonous for the fowls to gaze upon 365 days in the year.

I have an acquaintance occupying the position of steward in one of the hotels here. He has supplied the guests with the same bill of fare on the same day of the year in rotation for the last twelve years, but in this case the bill of fare never rotates.

Then I read further that the variety is furnished by free range, one hundred head to the acre. Why, after the first week there wouldn't be worms enough on that acre to bait a hook and line. Anyone who has had the privilege of watching a hundred hens range of their own free will knows they cover every foot of space from an eighth to a quarter of a mile in all directions, and that while these gentlemen have undoubtedly made a great success with this method of feeding, better results will be had with a greater variety of food.

In being able to grant an acre range to each one hundred head, the Elm Farms are fortunate beyond the means of the average poultry breeder, but there are many things dear to the crop of a hen that must be supplied artificially.

Congratulating Mr. McGrew on his pleasant little trip to Elm Farm, and suggesting that he now hunt up the balanced ration fellow, I will close.

The Minorca In Prose and Poetry.

Editor American Fancier: When I wrote my views on Minorcas' combs, back and size for the readers of the American Fancier in January, I never anticipated it would be so many times continued in so many different ways in calling the attention of your readers to the many good qualities of the Minorca, and to tell how much there is yet to learn of this noble breed, and of all breeds of chickens. I may have erred in judgment in selecting specimens of my own to exhibit. I am pleased to state, no party but myself suffered by that selection. On the contrary, others profited by my not selecting from my yard, all first prize winners (the criticism of friend Maunder notwithstanding, may be well taken but ill advised), and I try to be satisfied and happy whether my birds win or lose, or the Standard of Perfection calls for five or six points to comb. I only ask that they give me sufficient notice and do not change it too often. While I show my birds in America and they are judged fairly by the Standard (it calls for six points to comb), I will try to produce birds accordingly, but, should I have a good bird otherwise, with seven or eight points, I should not hesitate to show them. If, on the other hand, I lived in Old England and their laws and rules called for seven or eight points to comb, I should, no doubt, be just as loyal and try and breed Minorcas accordingly. Friend Maunder says that inside of five years the present Standard will hardly be recognized. I will ask, is he breeding his birds now to fit the Standard as he thinks it will be five years hence? While that would be commendable (provided he knows what it will be), I am trying to produce birds to fit the Standard now, and suit the various judges who will decide their merits.

The Club was asked to vote for three names for judge of Minorcas at our annual meeting at Philadelphia. I had the honor to be chosen, and I take this occasion to thank my friends in the Club for this courtesy and confidence shown me. The management of the Keystone Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association of Philadelphia, has seen fit to choose one of the others to place the awards, who, no doubt, knows a good Minorca and can place them properly, but, he being a seller of show birds, and having the interest of his own strain to promote, I am waiting anxiously to see if he will arise to the occasion. I am in no ways doubtful, and, do not wish it to be so understood in any manner. All I ask, and it is my right to demand it, viz: an honest and just impartiality, with none of the natural human tendencies of self.

To one and all, the fairest chance,
No special interest to enhance;
Be good to "others," as to self,
And not be mindful of sordid pelf.

We all are trying for the goal,
All are working with honest soul.
Such a "judge" will win a name,
Richer, prouder, than regal fame.

Regarding meeting Mr. Maunder at New York in the Minorca alley, he says he thinks I don't mean what I said, for the reason that I am a director, etc., in the American Black Minorca Club, and further says: "Now friend Story tell us you did not mean New York but Philadelphia." I want to assure him I did mean what I said. I should be glad to meet some of Mr. Maunder's best specimens at New York's next exhibit unless something happens that I do not now know of to prevent me. I also expect to exhibit some birds at Philadelphia, and will be glad to meet him at either or both places. To make it a little more interesting, if he has any special inducements, I might show some specimens in his own city of Buffalo at the Pan-American exhibit of poultry.

In Philadelphia or any town,
My Minorcas win renown;
I send my birds to every fair,
The "Arlington strain" is rich and rare

I'll meet Friend Maunder at Buffalo,
At the Pan-American show;
I can tell by the Minorcas' cackle
They'll surely win the coming battle.

My Minorcas take first place,
In any town or any race;
If just one order you will try,
You will get your friends to buy.

ROWLAND STORY.

Fancy Pheasants and Their Allies.

EARED, GOLDEN AND AMHERST PHEASANTS.

The Eared Pheasants or Crossoptilons, are a very natural and easily distinguishable group, closely allied to the Kaleeges. Like those birds, they have a folded hen-like tail and bare red faces, but they also possess some very marked characteristics of their own.

They are big, heavy birds, equalling a large fowl in size, and are clothed in a peculiarly loose-textured, hairy-looking plumage, admirably adapted for defending them against the dry cold of their natural habitat, the higher mountains of Central and Eastern Asia. The first pair of tail feathers are particularly loose and filamentous, and overhang the others. The ends of all the tail feathers are glossy steel-blue, but with the exception of this, the plumage shows no bright colors; and the female is colored exactly like the male, only differing from him in not possessing spurs. All the species have a black velvety cap and white throat, the white extending behind up the sides of the face and terminating in two ear-like tufts, which give the bird a very quaint appearance. There are only a few species, differing chiefly in body color, and only one of these is well known in confinement.

THE MANCHURIAN EARED PHEASANT.

The native country of this bird is the hills of China. In color it is the dullest of its kind, being dark blackish brown; but this hue is set off by the red face and legs, and contrasts well with the white whiskers and white tail tipped with steel-blue.

It has been known in Europe for a considerable time and does well there, being of a quiet disposition, and easily domesticated. Mr. Tegetmeier states that he has seen it in this condition in the Welsh hills, as tame as a common fowl. The male is said not to show himself off to the female, as if conscious that he has no superior beauty to display; though this does not prevent other male birds without special adornment, such as the common pigeon, from making conspicuous exhibitions of themselves! The Crossoptilon, from its steady disposition, would probably stand showing, and would doubtless thrive in situations too bleak for ordinary poultry.

The London Zoo has possessed another species—the Tibetan Eared Pheasant, which I was fortunate enough to see there. This is a striking looking bird, all the plumage except the cap and the tip of the tail being white, well set off by the red face and feet. There is also a beautiful species whose body-color is blue-grey, but this has not yet been kept in captivity, so far as I am aware. This is a pity, as it is certainly the most remarkable of all; but I hope that in time the whole genus of these fine birds will be better known. Birds that can be completely domesticated are not so common that we can afford to neglect any of them.

Very different from the soberly-clad and bulky eared Pheasants are the beautiful gold and Amherst Pheasants, which have no very near relatives, and are almost unsurpassed among birds for gorgeousness of attire. They are not large birds, being inferior in bulk to the hen of the common Pheasant, although the tails of the cocks are very long. This sex also possesses a crest, and a cape or ruff of broad feathers on the neck, which can be expanded and twisted over from one side to the other when the ornament is being displayed to the hens, for these birds favor the one-sided method of showing off.

The hens of the two species are as big as the cocks and are much alike, resembling that of the common Pheasant in general form and style. But they are easily distinguished from all other hen Pheasants by their brown plumage boldly barred across with black; and from each other by characters which I shall mention later on, although at first sight they might easily be confounded.

Both species come from China and are frequently seen in captivity; they are easy to rear, but very bad tempered, the cocks not only fighting savagely with each other, but even being apt to kill the hens on occasion. They will interbreed in confinement, and the hybrids are fertile either with each other or with the parent stocks, although the two species are most undoubtedly distinct.

THE GOLD PHEASANT.

This species has—in the male—a full silky crest covering the whole head, a square-tipped ruff, and the plumage mostly possessing a peculiar glossy lustre, which wonderfully enhances its rich colors, and renders its owner about the most brilliant bird in existence. The crest is golden-yellow, the cheeks and throat buff and the ruff rich orange barred with glossy purple; the upper part of the back is dark metallic green, and the saddle golden yellow fringed with reds at the sides. The shoulders, breast and flanks are bright red, and the innermost quills of the wing dark glossy blue. The flights are dark brown edged externally with buff, and the tail is black mottled with buff, the centre tail feathers being spotted and the rest barred obliquely. Along the base of the tail extend some "side hangers" of scarlet.

The bill and legs are yellow and the eyes pale yellow also. The hen also has yellow legs and a slight wash of gold on the head; moreover, the brown of her plumage has a yellowish cast. She has dark brown eyes, and by this can be distinguished from a young cock not yet in color, for the cocks do not attain to their full plumage till the second autumn, but the light colored eye appears early and distinguishes them long before this.

This splendid Pheasant is one of the oldest fancy birds, having been exported from China more than a century ago, both to India and to Europe; it is, of course, well established with us now, and freely bred in captivity. It can be turned out and will thrive in a state of freedom, having run wild in the United States. But, although smaller, it is more than a match for the common Pheasants, owing no doubt to its greater lightness and activity of movement, and hence is not a desirable inhabitant of the woods where these are preserved. It is well suited for town fanciers, not being noisy; and if a number of cocks are brought up together and kept away from hens, they may be safely associated and form a most gorgeous ornament on a grass run. At the London Zoo some years ago they had half-a-dozen so confined, and very handsome they looked.

Cock Gold Pheasants are of some value as supplying feathers which are much esteemed for making "flies" for salmon-fishing, and I have even heard of the poor birds being plucked for this purpose. I should imagine, however, that the cruel practice would defeat its object in time, as too frequent plucking would certainly impair the quality of the feathers, both in texture and color. If the birds are well looked after, their naturally moulted feathers ought to be in good condition, and as the most brilliant ones tend to come away almost all at once, they could be readily collected by penning up the moulting birds for a few days. Gold Pheasants stand confinement better than any other species I know. I have seen a cock in a dealer's possession in fine plumage, although confined in a hutch not larger than a show-pen for turkeys. And, speaking generally, one could keep these birds almost anywhere where there is room for Bantams. Unfortunately, although in confinement they do not seem particularly nervous, they cannot be trusted with full liberty like Silver Pheasants, as they cannot be relied upon to stay. They are also not so long-lived as are those birds.

There exists a curious variety of the Golden Pheasant which has been described as a distinct species—the Black-throated Golden Pheasant. It is, however, only known in captivity, and is probably merely a "sport" or accidental variation. In this breed the male's cheeks and throat are nearly black, and the shoulders are deep blackish red; while the centre tail feathers are barred like the rest, instead of being spotted. The hens are darker on the head and neck than the common birds, and the chicks are likewise darker. In the peculiarities of the male there is visible an approach to the Amherst Pheasant, next to be described, and they may conceivably indicate the presence of a strain of the blood of that species; but, considering that the common Peafowl, which has not been much crossed with the Javan bird, yet shows a resemblance to this in the male of the black-winged breed, this explanation is unlikely.

THE AMHERST PHEASANT.

Had not the beautiful Kaleege described in the last chapter already gained the name of the Silver Pheasant, that title would undoubtedly have been given to the present species; for at first sight they seem to correspond much as do the gold and silver varieties of so many breeds of poultry. The observant fancier will, however, notice several important points of difference between the two species, quite apart from the more striking one of color. The Amherst Pheasant is a bigger bird than the Golden, with a proportionately longer neck and smaller head—differences observable in both sexes, which likewise agree in having a bare patch of a livid pale blue or green around the eye; whereas the Gold Pheasant's face is nearly completely feathered, and what little skin is visible is yellow in the cock and reddish in the hen. Moreover, the Amherst cock has a smaller crest than his rival, this being confined to the back of the head; his ruff is composed of rounded feathers; his tail, with its side hangers, is much larger and longer, and his plumage is closer in texture and lacks the glossy appearance so noticeable in that of the other species. In color he is nearly as striking; the head (except the crest), the neck, shoulders, breast and upper back being dark metallic green laced with black, passing into metallic dark blue on the wings; the crest blood-red, the ruff white laced with black, the saddle pale yellow fringed with red; the underparts below the breast white, slightly washed with buff on the hinder part of the flanks; the centre tail-feathers white, barred and speckled with black; and the side tail feathers barred black and buff, set off by the broad scarlet-tipped side hangers; the eye is white and the legs bluish-grey.

The hen is more heavily barred with black than that of the other species and shows no tinge of yellow in her brown plumage, but has the head shaded with dark cinnamon. But her most obvious point of difference from the gold hen is her bare livid eye-patch, which, with her bluish feet, should serve to distinguish her at once. And, as many Amherst Pheasants have more or less Gold blood, these points should be looked out for in buying stock.

In the young male's change of plumage and in general disposition and habits, the Amherst Pheasant closely agrees with the Gold; but it comes from a colder climate, inhabiting the mountains of West China and East Tibet.

The first living specimens brought to Europe, early in the last century, were the property of Lady Amherst, whence the name always used for the bird. For many years no more arrived, and when some did come there was a difficulty in getting hens, and Amherst cocks were therefore crossed with females of the Gold species, the hybrid progeny being bred back to the Amherst until the strain was pure again. Even now the species is much scarcer and dearer than the Gold.

The male hybrid of the first generation is a magnificent bird, exceeding either pure species in beauty and size. In structural points and color he most resembles the gold, having a red breast, a brown and-black tail, and a full crest like that bird; but on his neck he bears a white ruff like the Amherst, and shows the dark green of that species on the throat and shoulders. In having the crest of a glowing orange-red, and a more or less developed yellow band at the upper part of the breast, he resembles neither parent species.

The three--quarter--bred Amherst hybrid nearly resembles the pure bird of that species, but shows the "bar sinister" in the extension of the red crest to the forehead and in a strong buff wash on the under parts and flanks. I have never seen a bird with three-fourths of Gold blood, so I cannot give the characteristics of such a one. It is well known, however, as I stated above, that these hybrids will breed any way, even between themselves; but in spite of the great beauty of the first cross, breeders have chiefly confined themselves to obtaining the pure Amherst by breeding back to it. It may with very much reason be asked, why birds which can be bred together like this when in captivity do not get hopelessly mixed up in the wild state, since their ranges are contiguous; but the fact appears to be that the Amherst keeps as a rule to its own ground at a higher elevation, and drives off the Golden species when this invades its territory. Thus the chance of intercrossing is not so great as it would be if the species were absolutely on an equality in the matter of size and habitat.

The Chinese state that when snares baited with grain are laid for the Amherst Pheasants, the birds are sufficiently intelligent to try to sweep the corn away with their long tails in order to eat it without risk. This sounds very improbable, and I have seen the story alluded to slightingly by a very high authority on game birds. But native accounts of the habits of animals, absurd as they often are and appear to be, have a way of sometimes turning out to be correct, so that I suspend my judgment on the point, and should very much like to know if breeders of this Pheasant have observed it to be endowed with any peculiar amount of intelligence.

Before leaving the subject of these fine Pheasants, it is necessary to mention that both the Amherst and the Gold, and also their hybrid, have been crossed with the Common Pheasant. And the remarkable thing about the results of these crosses is that they all resemble each other so closely that they might be imagined to have had the same parents. There are male specimens of each in the South Kensington Museum, and all have a rich cinnamon color, with purple neck and buff tail. Their size is large and their form graceful. This similarity of the offspring of such very differently colored species as the Amherst and Gold Pheasants, when crossed with another, is paralleled by a fact too familiar to Mule breeders, that yellow as well as green Canaries, unless specially gifted with prepotency, are likely to throw dark Mules to Goldfinch cocks. And thus one might fairly argue, as the color peculiarities of the Amherst tend to be swamped in its hybrids, that the Gold or something very like it was the original form whence both species were long ago derived.—F. Lofty Thoughts of the Editor

We have just heard that the pigeon judges selected to place the awards at the Chicago show to be held from January 20th to 25th inclusive, 1902, are Mr. Henry Tiemann, Mr. Schimmell and Mr. Robert Joos of the American Pigeon Keeper.

We also hear that Mr. Joseph Gavin and Mr. George Feather have been appointed to judge at New York.

Also that Wm. Stanton and Wellington Kennedy have been put on the list for Boston.

From Mahwah, N. J., comes word that "Old Jack" is thinking of taking a whack at our English relations again, as he writes that Messrs. Havemeyer Bros., have raised some pretty warm Fans this season in Saddle Backs, Solid Reds, Yellows, and a few Blacks. We shall also have a few sample Whites to show when they have got their finishing touches on."

We are glad to see our contemporary, Fan and Feather, out again. Though knocked rather hard they are still in the ring and wish their subscribers to know it was through no fault of theirs that the issue was delayed, but through what might have been a serious affair had it not have been attended to. The floor sunk some eight inches through heavy machinery and had to be put in a safe condition before printing operations could be resumed.

From Chicago we hear pigeon fanciers in general have had a good season and that several warm ones are being groomed for the winter's flight. Mr. Muir having a "cracker jack" in a Blue Saddle, while Messrs. Rohlsen, Celic, Rhodes and Johnson of La Salle all have turned out a few to be heard from.

In Baltimore I hear both good and bad news, Mr. Tiemann having been disappointed with one or two pair of cracks imported to turn out good ones, and they haven't turned, while Messrs. Lauterbach, Kohler and Diffenderffer have a few they consider warm.

So Washington is to have a show again. Glad to hear it boys and the writer wishes you a full measure of success. Try and run your show on such a basis as your chance for loss is brought to the minimum, that is, don't go in for lots of classes and small prize money but decent prize money and less classes. Try and get a good entry in such number of classes that each class will show a profit over what it costs, then you will have a show to win out, but a large entry in a large number of classes is not always the best way, as it costs money to pen birds, whether 10 birds are in 5 classes or in one class, the cost per pen to him is the same, while ten birds in one class will show a good profit. Pan-American Show.

Having had considerable complaint about the duration of the pigeon exhibit at the Pan-American Exposition, I have for some time had the matter under consideration and have succeeded in having the time shortened. This will be good news to many fanciers who had decided they would not show for the reason mentioned. As matters now stand, the pigeon exhibit will take place during the week of October 21 to 26. All exhibits will be required to be in their pens not later than Tuesday, October 22d, at 10 o'clock. Judging will begin as soon after that time as possible and not later than Wednesday morning. All judging will be completed by Thursday evening and exhibits can be removed any time after Saturday noon, October 26th. This will keep the birds in their pens practically less than five days, and no fancier can reasonably ask for a shorter time at a show of this nature. The coops will be ready for occupancy on Monday, when early arrivals will be promptly penned and all exhibits, while in the care of the Exposition, will be cared for by experienced men. On October 25th there will be held a meeting of fanciers of poultry, pigeons and pet stock in the New York State building, where it is expected some speaking and a general good time will be indulged in. Every fancier present at the Exposition will be invited and this will no doubt prove the largest convention of fanciers ever held in this country.

This exhibition bids fair to be one long to be remembered and every fancier who can possibly arrange to spend the week of October 21st to 26th in Buffalo will never have reason to regret it. Make entries as early as possible, none can be accepted after September 16th. Remember the date and if you have not received a premium list send for one at once to F. A. Pan-American Judges.

At the beginning, and even at this time, it has been a hard matter to decide just what varieties or variety each judge at the coming great Pan-American pigeon show would have allotted to him. That we have the ablest and largest list of competent judges ever engaged for a pigeon show in America has been conceded from the start, and now that the time draws near for the closing of entries, fanciers naturally wish to know which of the judges will most likely handle their variety. After talking the matter over with a great many well posted fanciers as well as corresponding with nearly all of the largest exhibitors, I find it is still a hard matter to complete the list of allotment with the feeling that all will be pleased. It is well known in our fancy that every judge,

WRITE YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS PLAINLY.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 150th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

no matter how able, honest or conscientious he may be, has his enemies and some of our very best judges have no doubt heard it said that Mr. So-and-So will not show under him After weighing all complaints as carefully as possible and taking pains to ascertain the feelings of many of the largest exhibitors on the judge question, I feel that I am in a position to know who is most liable to suit the majority. On some varieties, when it is impossible to tell at this time how large the entry will be, there is still a doubt, and it may come to pass that the services of two judges will be required on some of the most popular varieties. To help fanciers in making their entry and at the same time answer many inquiries on the subject, I have prepared the following list: Carriers, Antwerps, Show Homers and Barbs, Charles F. Wagner, Toronto, Canada; Pouters, A. M. Ingram, Milford, N. H., or Joseph Bardroff, Washington, D. C.; Pigmy Pouters, Joseph Bardroff; Runts and Dragoons, R. D. Craft, Somerville, Mass; Fantails, F M. Gilbert, Evansville, Ind , or George Ewald, Cincinnati, Ohio: Trumpeters and Nuns, A. M. Ingram; Short Face Tumblers, Joseph Gavin, Boston, Mass; Clean Leg Tumblers, F. L. Weston, Medford, Mass., and K. J. Muir, Chicago, Ill.; Muffed Tumblers, Frank W. Gorse, Highlandville, Mass., and Joseph Gavin; Parlor Tumblers, F. W. Gorse or Charles E. Lang, Buffalo, N. Y.; Jacobins, Wellington Kennedy, Red Bank, N. J.; Owls, Wellington Kennedy or George Feather, Mattapan, Mass; Oriental Frills, George Ewald; Turbits, Joseph Gavin; Magpies, Henry Tiemann; Swallows, Chas. E Lang; Archangels, George Feather; Flying Homers, Joseph Gavin; Other varieties, Joseph Gavin, F. M. Gilbert and George Ewald.

While the above list is subject to some possible changes it will give intending exhibitors a fair idea of who will pass on their birds, and to the best of my knowledge and belief this division of the classes can be improved on very little. Entries should be made as early as possible. They will positively close on September 16th.

MOULTING.—There can be no doubt that this is a most exhausting process, and therefore every endeavor should be made beforehand to build up the body, and, as it were, to lay up material for supplying the necessary food for the growth of the new coat, and this is why it is that a little rest between breeding time and moulting is so necessary to the worn-out stock birds. The young ones, too, have to keep on growing and developing body, bone and muscle, as well as to supply the material for the growth of feather, and this work will be materially helped if they have been well cared for and kept in good condition. Where this has been the case the better will the operation be performed and the sooner will it be gone through, and the care and anxiety of the owner during the process will be much lessened. When successfully performed, the moult has another most important effect upon the system, brought about by the rapid and enormous drain upon the blood, from which its supplies are drawn, and the compensating effort to make good the loss, while during the process a cleansing and purifying process takes place in that fluid whereby the humors and impurities are cast out. To help in this work a little cooling and purifying medicine, such as Epsom salts, will be found of great service, but only in such quantity as to gently clear the system without having a purging effect.

At this season it will be found best to feed rather plentifully on nitrogenous or body-forming grains, such as maple peas and tares, but they should be of the best quality, well seasoned and perfectly clean and clear of all fungoid growth. The water, too, should be kept clean and pure by frequent changing, and a good supply of suitable grit, old mortar and salt constantly at hand for the birds to peck at. On the latter material there has lately been some discussion, and perhaps it would be well to speak more fully on the subject. There can be no doubt that the birds like it, and that they do all the better when provided with it; but the difficulty seems to arise over the way in which it shall be given, whether in its natural state as rock salt or in the prepared form of a lump of table salt. As a general rule I should say that the former is the most suitable, for the reasons that it can be kept cleaner and drier, and that only a small portion can be taken at a time owing to the hardness of the material It is with the last quality that the exception to the rule is connected, and more especially with those varieties possessing beaks of the softer and finer kinds. With such birds it would be impossible for them to break off enough to satisfy their craving for this food, and in their case at least the softer kind would be best. On the other hand, the table salt, even when taken in the lump, is soft and crumbly, and therefore is likely to be broken up and scattered about, and thus to become soiled and contaminated, and it is wont to attract the moisture in the air, and, if left for any length of time to make a damp patch around the spot where it is kept. Another fault attributed to it is that the birds will take more than is good for them, and several such cases have come to my notice where stomach troubles and even death of very young ones. have resulted from this cause; but these are only exceptional cases, and in nearly every one it was found that the birds had been deprived of this food for some time previously, which had resulted in its excessive consumption. So far it would seem that the table kind is a very poor substitute for the harder sort, but in actual use it will be found that this is more apparent than real, and more especially when a little care is exercised in its preparation and use. It is very rarely that I have not both kinds in my different lofts, and except in such cases as I have stated I have always found the table salt of great use. The plan I have followed is to always have it in a lump and not to throw it down loosely on the floor of the loft to protect it as much as possible from dirt and droppings, and to remove it as soon as it shows signs of getting damp and discolored. It is the want of care and allowing it to become fouled that is, in my opinion, the cause of the trouble, and that has in many cases earned such a bad name for this most useful article. Again, it is always kept in front of the birds, and when this is done they never seem to take more than is good for them, and to make it as firm and consistent as possible I give the lump a good baking in the oven.—W. Fellows in Feathered World, England.

PET STOCK.

Our English Belgian Hare Letter.

Editor American Fancier: Since my last I have very carefully read and re-read all the correspondence which has appeared in the columns of your valuable paper, and the result is that I am more than ever convinced that there is no such animal as the White Belgian Hare rabbit. It is clear that no authenticated so-called White Belgian Hare rabbit was produced from two brown red pure bred Belgian Hare rabbits, but the arguments set forth clearly lead me to confirm my old views, viz., that either the so-called white was the produce of a Belgian Hare doe rabbit, bred from ordinary Belgian Hare rabbits, without authenticated pedigrees, or blood which has been run upon the unknown lines of the Flemish Giant, or possibly a Poland has struck a pure bred Belgian Hare doe rabbit, or more probable still, the pure bred Belgian Hare buck rabbit has served the Polish doe. However, let me remind my many friends that in England we have never heard of a pure bred Belgian Hare rabbit being white. Let me also point to a fact which is well known in climates like the north of England, Scotland and parts of Ireland. The wild hare's natural color is a drab brown red in summer and in winter white or grey, the same as the Russian and Sweden and other northern portions of Europe, and possibly it may be that the climatic influences have similarly affected the Belgian Hare rabbits in your northerly provinces, but I don't think that is so with the so-called White Belgian Hare rabbit. Recently, at a very large gathering of fanciers at Tunbridge Wells show, this question of White Belgian Hare rabbits was discussed, and the opinion formed was that not a single breeder had ever seen or heard of one, and therefore I have only one solution, viz., that the White Belgian Hare rabbit of America is simply a bastard so far as purity of true Belgian Hare blood is concerned.

I hope shortly to write my promised views on feeding and keeping Belgian Hares for exhibition and profit.

I must add that I have had very great pleasure in discussing, or, rather, reading, the various opinions, and that the views of all have been expressed in most temperate language and with a common desire on both sides to benefit the breeder of Belgian Hares.

ALFRED CRITCHETT, SR.
Bandora, Sutton, Surrey,
Eng., August 10, 1901.

What of the Future?

Editor American Fancier: Breeders of Belgian Hares, since the force of the boom has been spent, are asking themselves and each other, What of the future? Is the Belgian Hare to be what it now is? Will there be a demand for it? Will the prices be high or low?

No one not gifted with prophetic powers can give a positive answer to these questions. Anyone who has had experience with booms and fancies can draw more or less reasonable inferences and analogies. It will be my purpose not to make prophetic revelations, but to draw such inferences from the present status of the animal as to me seem reasonably probable of happening in the future.

The Belgian Hare, if it is to succeed as a fancier's animal, will not remain stationary. It will move forward in development. It will probably improve in shape and other characteristics. Especially will it be likely to become diversified in color. There is reason to believe that we shall have as recognized varieties in the future the present red variety, deepened and enriched in color; a glossy black variety; a blue variety; a white variety; a buff variety; and possibly a variety marked with white, perhaps with four white feet and a white blaze in the face. Unless there are a number of varieties to meet the demands of different tastes, there will not be so keen an interest in the hare as there would be otherwise. These different varieties will probably differ in popularity, some being more popular than others, and it is my belief that the red will continue to be the most popular of all the varieties.

The demand for the Belgian Hare I believe will continue, but it will be more distinctly separated into two classes than at present. The demand will be first for market specimens, animals that will dress well and furnish plenty of delicious and nutritious food. Then there will be a demand for exhibition specimens for showing. This demand will be much less than for the market animals, just as it is in poultry. Prices will be adjusted according to the kind, the amount, and the source of demand. Market animals will not bring high prices, but the price will be affected by the relative values of food products. If the prices of beef, mutton and pork are high, the price of hare meat will be comparatively high. If the demand for this meat is large, the price will be higher than if it is small. And if the hare be regarded as a delicacy for the table, rather than a necessity, the price will be relatively high. The price of exhibition hares will be higher than that of market animals, but the sales will be less numerous. The prices of exhibition animals will depend upon the value of the prizes that they can win. If the prizes offered for competition are numerous and valuable, high prices will rule for the best specimens; if the prizes are of little value and few in number, the price of exhibition specimens will be comparatively low. The number and value of the prizes will depend upon the amount of competition. If breeders exhibit largely associations will offer valuable and numerous prizes; if they exhibit only a few specimens prizes will diminish in number and shrink in value. Breeders, therefore, to a large extent, have it in their own power to fix the value of exhibition specimens. While they cannot control the prices of the meat, except, perhaps, in a very limited degree, they can very largely control the prices of exhibition animals. If they are wise, therefore, they will exhibit at all the shows and make large entries. Whether they win or lose the prizes, they will in the end win by increasing the value of exhibition specimens.

A moment's reflection will make this clear. A first-class exhibition fowl in this country is worth from $100 to $150. An equally good specimen in England is worth from $250 to $500. What makes the difference in value? It is not the intrinsic value of the fowls. But it is to be remembered that in England the prizes offered are of greater value than in this country and that a sure winner can gain several times as much in a season there as he can here. Because he can win more money he is saleable at a higher price. The ability to win a large sum makes the fowl valuable. If an American bird costing $100 can win $100 in prizes in a season, and an English bird costing $250 can win $250 in a season, the English bird is as well worth $250 as the American is $100, because each has an earning capacity equal to his cost.

In the United States running horses bring higher prices than trotting horses, and yet for practical purposes the trotting gait is the more valuable. What makes the difference? Look at the stakes in a running race and those in a trotting race. The prizes offered for running horses are much more valuable than those offered for trotting horses, and a runner, capable of winning, has an earning capacity much greater than a trotter capable of winning. The earning capacity is the dominant consideration in fixing the price.

If, then, a sure winner among Belgian Hares can earn but $100 in a season of exhibitions, his price will be much less than if he could earn $500 in the same time. And if high prices are to prevail, large prizes must be offered. But associations never can afford to offer large prizes unless the competition is very keen and the classes are well filled. The more the association takes in entries, the more it can afford to pay in prizes. Let breeders prove to associations by large entries that they can afford to pay liberal prizes and they will pay them. Each year will show, under such circumstances, an increase in the value of the prizes offered. An association would just as willingly offer a prize of $100 as of $1 if it could be sure that the entries would warrant the offer. But associations will never do this unless breeders prove by large entries that this is a safe course to pursue. And if large prizes become common, the animals that can win them will become valuable.

What, then, of the future? The future is largely, almost exclusively from a fancy point of view, what the breeders choose to make it. They can make a sure winning Belgian buck worth $25, or $1,000, or even more. They can depress or they can elevate the price according to their liberality. It will cost something to make the prices high, but, in my opinion, it will pay better in the end than to save in entries and lose in sales. These are matters of vital importance and deserve serious consideration. They ought not to be dismissed with the reading of the words, but ought to be pondered over until they lead to action. Weigh these ideas carefully and act with deliberation, doing what shall seem best, not for the immediate present, but for the future of the Belgian Hare and its breeders.

OIL AND GOLD FILL A POOR PUGILIST'S POCKETS

THE LITTLE WIFE WHO DID IT ALL IS DEAD.

"BILLY" MANNING, WHO PLAYED IN HARD LUCK THREE MONTHS AGO, RETURNS TO NEW YORK A REAL MILLIONAIRE.

DEAD WIFE'S INVESTMENTS IN DESERT "FRUIT GROWING" LAND IN CALIFORNIA NOW FULL OF GUSHING WELLS.

GRUB-STAKE TO A REPORTER-PROSPECTOR MAKE HIM HALF OWNER IN A MINE YIELDING $20,000 MONTHLY.

Into the Fifth Avenue Hotel lobby last night walked "Billy" Manning, retired light weight pugilist and first boxing instructor of Champion James Jefferies.

He wore a big diamond in his scarf. A bundle of money in his waistcoat spoiled the set of his very correct frock coat. "I am making a tour of the world," said Manning, "and I am stopping at this hotel while some tailors are doing business for me."

Manning was in town three months ago. His abode then was the Eureka Hotel, in the Bowery. He wore at that time a summer serge suit, and the wintry winds found free passage through it.

When the first Mrs. Manning was alive ("Becky," her husband called her"), she took care of the winnings and savings of her husband. She got an idea that "Arroyo seco" land was good to raise fruit on, and bought small tracts all around Los Angeles, Cal. "Arroyo seco" is dry river bed, and nothing has been persuaded to grow on it.

While Manning was in the straits described last winter he got a letter from California, requesting him to go out there and meet some persons who wished to buy some of his land. A check for expenses was enclosed. He saw his lawyer first and was advised not to sell. Oil had been struck around his property, and every foot of his land was in the oil belt. He followed advice, and one of his wells, a 1,000 barrel gusher, is giving him $800 a day profit. Manning became a millionaire.

There was more luck in store for Manning. Years ago he had "grub-staked" F. M. Mooers, who was a Brooklyn Eagle reporter twenty years ago. Mooers never found gold until a year ago in the Landsbergh district of California. At last, when he was eating the last of his beans and drinking the last of the water which he had "packed" many miles, he said: "Before I quit I will go up that gulch for one more try." He found a nugget worth $1,000, and staked out claims which now include the Yellow Aster mine, paying $20,000 a month.

Because of his grub-stakes Manning has become half owner of the Yellow Aster. Mooers is with Madden in the round-the-world trip. Paris, St. Petersburg, Cairo, Bombay and the Philippines are in their route.

"I want to see the famine country in India," said Mr. Mooers. "I am quite an expert in famine myself and can sympathize."

"Automobiles and first cabins are on our programme," said Manning,

What man has done, man can do again. The above is simply one case in a thousand.

Richard Ellis, of Los Angeles, invested $100 in oil stock, and within one year sold out at a net profit of $31,620,000.

Mr. John L. Bunting invested $170, and is now rated a millionaire.

It is those who fear to back their own judgment who always remain poor. Opportunity is all a true man can ask. Never before or probably again will there be such grand opportunities as are offered today in the California Oil fields. Among the many you will not find a better or more honest proposition than that offered by the die by being lousy than from any other cause. You can talk about improper care and food, lack of green food and grit, but, when looking for the root of the trouble look for lice, and when you find them look into the merits of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies. Rev. H. H. Purrington, Mt. Vernon, Maine, writes: "We all use Death to Lice and find it most satisfactory." The Norton Poultry Yards, Dallas, Texas, writes: "We have been using your Death to Lice for the past four years and it has given entire satisfaction."

MOUNTAINSIDE LOFTS AND BANTAM Yards, Mahwah, N. J., Havemeyer Bros, Proprietors.—To parties on the lookout for exhibition stock for the coming fall shows in Game and Variety Bantams, we have to announce that, having had a successful season, we are prepared to supply their requirements in either young or old stock and of the kind that can hold their own in the hottest competition. In a recent article from the pen of A. E. Blunck of Johnstown, N. Y., published in the American Fancier, he stated that when showing against stock from Mountain Side, he knew he was "up against the real thing." Enough said. Why buy elsewhere when such an authority tells you where you can get "the real thing?" Our prices are reasonable in accordance with quality. The "real thing" is always cheap. Anything but the "real thing" in Bantams is dear at any price. All inquiries for stock should be addressed to the Manager, JOHN GLASGOW. 14-21

MORE CHICKENS

have head lice than most poultry keepers realize. Some think that these little pests are pin feathers on the top of a chicks' head and do not take the trouble to examine them closely until the broods begin to die off. One Massachusetts fancier says that it cost him hundreds of dollars to learn this. Death to Lice Ointment is made especially for the extermination of these little blood suckers, without injury to the little chicks. 100 doses 10c postpaid.

MORE CHICKENS

than should go into two coops are often crowded into one. The lice will then crowd into these small quarters and assist to make the nights long, hot and miserable. The little mites or spider lice crawl out of the cracks and crevices and extract more blood from the chicks than they can make during the day. Charles L. Evans, Wood River, Neb., writes: "I have given your 'special' a thorough trial. I had a henhouse that was polluted with mites. I mixed one (four) ounce box of special to one gallon of whitewash and gave it a thorough whitewashing. I now defy anyone to find a louse about my hen house."

MORE CHICKENS

properly cared for mean more money. Proper care means a liberal use of Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies as well as suitable food and housing. No poultry keeper ever failed because he put too much money into Death to Lice. Many do fail because they do not keep their flocks free from vermin. The most successful money-making poulterers are those who use the most Lamberts. We have remedies for all kinds of lice, on anything and everything. We put it up in all sizes of packages to suit all kinds of people. We have all kinds of good testimonials as to its efficacy.

"RINGLETS" SOAR STILL HIGHER.

AT THE IMPERIAL SHOW OF THE NATION—
MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, N, Y., THE WORLD'S RECORD OF

E. B. THOMPSON'S BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS

4 YEARS IN SUCCESSION was the most remarkable ever achieved in the realm of poultry exhibitions. This record is by many points the highest ever accomplished in the annals of the New York Show; Winning during 4 years in succession MORE THAN THREE TIMES AS MANY 1ST PRIZES as any other exhibitor, and as many 1ST PRIZES as ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED, besides more than twice as many Cups and Specials as all, including the superb challenge Trophy, value $100, for best cock, cockerel, hen, pullet and exhibition pen; $100 Sterling Silver Cup for finest exhibit, Grand Special Prize Sweepstakes Cup value $100 presented by the President for best P. Rock cock, cockerel, hen and pullet, any variety. My clean sweep of on pullets has never been approached in Madison Square Garden, and stands alone and unequaled.

FIRST, SECOND, THIRD, FOURTH AND FIFTH PRIZES

The world's record of 1st on exhibition pen at New York 8 years in succession is the undisputed Champion. With their 1900 record the "RINGLETS" have won at New York a grand total of 77 PRIZES, 31 of these prizes are 1st and specials, being 17 more 1st and special prizes than won by any competitor in the history of the show. Rare bargains in yearling breeders in lots of a trio or 100. Show bird fit to win in the fastest company. Richly illustrated 24 page catalogue on application. Elegant breeders in any number. Eggs from finest exhibition matings, 1 sitting, $5; 2 sittings, $9; 3 sittings, $12; 4 sittings, $15. ADDRESS 91-tf

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

WILLIAM McKINLEY

LAID AT REST

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19th, 1901.

A gloomy day of our fair Republic, a grief stricken nation and the universal sorrow of all civilized mankind, leave an indelible page in the history of the human race. Brave in war and in peace, wise and unselfish in carrying out the trusts of the people, ideal of all that is pure and noble in home life, typically the embodiment of the true and representative American, the spirit of McKinley will live as a guiding star in the years to come.

From the Editor's Perch.

We learn that the poultry building at the New York State Fair will be enlarged and furnished with new Empire coops.

The Chicago dates follow New York and Boston but clash with Charleston, S. C. It seems to be a great season for double show weeks.

The two rival New Jersey associations hold their shows the same week, and there promises to be a lively time in Mosquito State the second week in December.

The modern poultry journalism as exemplified in several papers, is not calculated to inspire genuine fanciers with any large amount of respect and regard for such methods. To deliberately puff up the stock of breeders, who pay big chunks for advertising, regardless of whether the stock is worthy of it or not, does much injury to the fancy. It kills the confidence that should exist between buyer and seller. It is even worse than the miserable system that enables breeders to sell birds on the fictitious and inflated value of a score card.

Furthermore when a representative of a paper states, as has been done several times, that he can "make" the breeder by giving him a great send off, the bait takes well and new stars in the poultry firmament appear as suddenly as mushrooms over night. In one sense it "makes" the breeder and "breaks" him too.

The small advertiser, no matter how much superior his stock may be, is lost in the scramble for big space and paid reading notices. We have always advised young advertisers to start in the classified columns. The latter are carefully read every week and no advertisement is overlooked. That is why so many good sales are made through these columns.

Deacon William Spoll, of Johnstown, N. Y., spent several weeks at his summer resort in Massachusetts and took a trip one day to talk Silver Wyandottes with John C. Jodrey, Danvers, Mass. Mr. Spoll is an old Silver Wyandotte fancier and told us that it was a treat to look over Mr. Jodrey's fine birds, some 300 in number. The deacon says: "Every blooming bird is laced all over and under."

We regret to learn that B. N. Pierce will retire as a judge of poultry. Impaired health compels him to give up a profession that he has honored for over 30 years. We trust that "Uncle Ben" Pierce will stay with us for many years to come as editor of the Fanciers' Gazette. His pen is always ready to bring out good and interesting matter, so "Uncle" push it for all it's worth.

According to the Daily Telegraph, England, indications point to a pheasant season considerably above the average. The wild bred birds have done excellently, the climatic conditions which prevailed during May and June having proved all in their favor, and some splendid broods, numerically strong, have been hatched. On the other hand, though it seems likely that hand-reared birds—more and more, by the way, are artificially raised each year—will for the most part show up well when the season commences, it is unfortunately the fact that the mortality amongst the young chicks this summer, owing to the well known and almost annually recurring epidemic, has been very heavy. Expert opinion so far seems at variance as to the direct cause of what is not unnaturally regarded by large game proprietors as a great scourge.

Mr. E. Butcher, our correspondent in Sydney, Australia, writes:

"You will doubtless be interested to know that there is a great boom in the poultry industry in this state at the present time, and breeders are entering into keen competition with each other in raising birds of high quality of all the popular breeds, in which the Orpingtons take a very prominent position, as also the Wyandottes. Our hatching season is now in full swing and there has been an exceptionally large demand for incubators and brooders, those of American manufacture coming in for a large share of the business. I receive inquiries almost daily as to the best incubators in the market. I believe that both the Cyphers and the Star incubators are sold pretty largely, as also the Petalumas, but still there is, in my opinion, plenty of room for other makes, provided the quality is good and the prices moderate."

Visual Influence in Breeding.

[A Series of Special Articles written expressly for the AMERICAN FANCIER by HENRY M. LADD, proprietor of Crescent Farm, Cleveland, Ohio.]

Jacob, down there in Podun-Aram, knew a thing or two about breeding if he did live over seventeen hundred years before the Christian era. He was a shrewd plotter, as the story goes, and seems to have set the pace for his numerous descendants. His little scheme for getting rich fast worked like a charm, and just to think that it was all done by scientific breeding! He knew more than did his twice-told papa-in-law and so could get spotted cattle at will. We do not read that he knew good Barred Rocks when he saw them or started any new breeds of poultry, but he might have done so. He had one phase of the subject down fine at any rate. In 3,646 years we are not much ahead of him in his specialty. His specialty was visual influence. We have all heard strange stories of prenatal markings through visual influence. The gossips who gather at quilting bees are full of them. But some of them are true, and they indicate the extremely intimate relation between mind and body, or that which perceives and that which conceives. A sudden fright, for example, at certain stages of conception has been known to mark the child forever with the object that at the moment caught the eye of the mother. This is a well known fact and numerous instances might be cited. But this fact reveals a principle, which seems to hold more or less in all animal life. So the human mother is told to surround herself with beautiful faces and forms in marble, or color, or life, in order to impress beauty upon the yet unborn child. This principle of visual influence, if it has any value, must be a powerful adjunct in skillful and scientific breeding among animals as well and equally as well in the poultry world. I am told by a careful breeder of a certain popular variety of dogs that he can get white pups almost every time by chaining a white dog in front of the bitch at the time of service. Others have vouched for similar results in other lines. One breeder of heavy draft horses, for example, secures bay color every time by covering the eyes of the mare after being teased by a bay stallion and then serving a stallion of some other color whose size and shape are especially desirable.

Now, if these things are so, we can surely avail ourselves of this same principle in breeding high class and fancy poultry, though the visual influence has to remain bound up for some time within the stern walls of an egg shell. I have myself produced as fine Rosecomb White Leghorns as you would ever wish to see simply by visual influence, without the introduction of any other blood than that of the Single Comb White Leghorn bred in line for many years, with never a rosecomb in it. How was this done? Simply by having a pen of White Leghorns next to a pen of White Wyandottes in which was a magnificent White Wyandotte cockerel, so beautiful, so attractive and so seductive that one at least of the White Leghorn hens could not keep her delighted eyes off from him, and just at the right time when the egg was being endowed with life he has appeared in sight to fill the eye, and as a result Rosecomb White Leghorns, perfect Leghorns in type, size, shape and everything, bred in single comb line throughout a long ancestry, but topped off now for the first time with a handsome rosecomb. I have been able to produce several such handsome male birds obtained solely in this way, and I am of the opinion that Rosecomb White Leghorns bred in this way will prove more reliable as breeders of the rosecomb variety than those originally obtained by a mixture of different breeds. I believe them to be very highly valuable birds, worth many times what an ordinary rosecomb is worth—in fact, I would not have an ordinary rosecomb. In this case the blood is pure and the visual influence pervasive and deeply stamping into the very being of the bird the rosecomb tendency. Where it is the result of the introduction of other blood the rosecomb tendency is only partial and fractional. So, too, a speckled or black and white bird may be obtained on a pure white breed simply by visual influence without the introduction of any other blood, a fine large male bird of black plumage, like the Black Minorca, being in the eye of the female just at the right time when the life endowment is given. These facts are interesting and show how certain desirable results may sometimes be attained. They also sound a note of warning and suggest a caution for the breeder's benefit. If you do not want such results to occur in your flock, cut off the visual influence by building higher board fences between your pens of different breeds, or else do as we do at Crescent Farm, separate them so far from each other that the admiring females of the flock cannot look with those goo-goo eyes upon the handsome males next door.

Chatham, N. Y.

Chatham has a good sized poultry building and a large number of new coops recently purchased from the Empire Cooping Company, but this year neither the house was large enough nor did they have coops enough for the birds that came. As far as the coops would permit the exhibit was fairly well classified. There was plenty of good birds here as M. T. Burn, Braun Bros., Myers, Hillis and others, with big strings, and besides Columbia County has many good breeders. Nearly, if not all the Standard breeds were represented and many not in, or that never will be in the Standard. Most of the American breeds were well represented and there were good ones among the Barred and Buff Rocks, White and Buff Wyandottes. The Polish was a show of themselves. Bantams, a large entry, some good ones shown. A very large show of turkeys, geese and ducks, with some corkers among them. Pigeons by the hundred, and it was lucky for us and perhaps exhibitors as well, that that expert on pigeons and pet stock, Mr. E. N. Barker, was present and took the task of judging them off our hands. He also judged the hares, rabbits, cavies, etc. As the American Fancier is not a dog journal, we refrain from writing of the dog show which was a separate affair, held under the American Kennel Club rules, but will simply say that 19 prizes were awarded to 9 dogs, Beagles and Cockers, whose home is almost in sight of the American Fancier office. The Coming Show at the National Capital.

Editor American Fancier: Arrangements for the Washington show are being pushed rapidly forward. The poultry, pigeon and Belgian Hare men are working in unison, and every indication points to the most successful exhibit of stock ever seen here. The association deserves great credit and the hearty support of every breeder, especially those of Belgian Hares. The poultry and pigeon fanciers had already gotten together, organized, and made preliminary arrangements for the show, when the Belgian Hare men asked that a department for their specialty be provided. The association made a most liberal offer to the Belgian Hare breeders of Washington, which should have been accepted by many; but, though all wanted an exhibit of hares held, only a very few were willing to help stand the extra expense and give their active support. But the poultry and pigeon breeders opened their association to the few and pledged themselves to hold a Belgian exhibit in conjunction with the poultry and pigeon show, thereby assuming extra expense from which they were not sure of receiving any benefits. Now that the show is an assured fact, the balance of the breeders have promised to support it by making liberal entries. Under the circumstances, few other bodies of poultry breeders would have considered the exhibit of hares. Out of town breeders of Belgians should not neglect this opportunity, now it is extended them, of exhibiting their stock in a city where more business and advertising will result than any place in the country. Washington has a residence population of nearly 300,000 and a visiting population of several thousand more. It is surrounded by suburbs that contribute at least three thousand men in business in Washington. All of these will be more or less interested. Being the national capital, where the eyes of the whole country are always turned, a winner here would have more precedence than a winner in any other show of twice the size. The exhibit will be held November 19 to 23, when the city is full of visitors and after those that leave here part of the year have returned. The Masonic Temple hall, where the show will be held, is well lighted and handsome, situated on one of the busiest corners of the retail business district, just opposite the Patent Office. The best class of people will attend a show in this hall. The newest field for the Belgian Hare breeder to work up is the south-east, where Belgian Hares are comparatively unknown. Those breeders who have a creditable display of stock at Washington, the natural example-setter for the south-east, will have most profitable business with the residents of that section. The Belgian Hare department will be judged by a competent official judge of the American Belgian Hare Registry Association, Inc. (headquarters at Kansas City), so that all hares shown in competition here can be registered immediately. An effort to have a Belgian Hare stew is on foot, which is thought will prove successful. The plan is to have the breeders of Washington and vicinity contribute their culls and as many cheap grade hares as they can to the association, who will have them cooked by a competent party and served during one of the days of the show with bread and butter and celery. This method of introducing the hare meat to the public was first tried at Kansas City in 1899, then in Los Angeles two months later on, in both cases proving highly satisfactory. Let the Washington Poultry and Pigeon and Belgian Hare Association have your heartiest support this fall—then carefully note your benefits.

Heuvelton, N. Y., Sept. 6th, 1901.

Butler, Pa.

The Butler Agricultural Society held one of the largest fairs in western Pennsylvania September 3d to 6th, 1901, there being over 30,000 people in attendance on the third day of the fair. The poultry exhibit was very large and represented almost all Standard varieties of fowls with lots of competition and some very good birds, especially in the Wyandotte classes. J. H. Robb of Renfrew, Pa., had two large pens of Silver Wyandottes on exhibition that will make it very interesting for some one in the winter shows. There were quite a number of birds disqualified, but as a whole the exhibit was to be complimented for it is very seldom that any agricultural society has as good a display in all classes as Butler. The Association officers deserve much credit for their efforts in making the poultry department a main feature in their exhibits by paying liberal cash prizes. The breeders of Butler county have taken the show fever and are contemplating on holding a show at Butler the coming winter and if accomplished will be a grand success with some grand birds on exhibition. The Fanciers' Association of New Jersey.

Editor American Fancier: An important event in the history of the poultry and pet stock industry is the annual show, where the best productions of fanciers are shown to the pleasure and profit of all. A visit to our next show will prove of interest and will fully justify your expectations. The Fanciers' Association of New Jersey was organized under the name of the Washington Feather Club, at Washington, N. J., December 1st, 1896, and its name was changed at the annual meeting held in that city January 19th, 1899, to the Fanciers' Association of New Jersey. Since then the Association has annually held shows, each year being an improvement in increased entries and satisfactory results. The last show, being the fifth, was held at Orange, N. J., January 1st to 4th, 1901. This show was the largest poultry and pet stock display ever held in New Jersey, 827 entries and over 1000 specimens. At a meeting of the Association during this show it was decided to hold the sixth annual show at Newark, N. J., on December 10th to 14th, 1901, being one of the first leading Associations to announce the date for holding its next show, but a suitable hall not being procurable, a lease of the Armory at Orange, N. J., was concluded, and the sixth annual show of the Fanciers' Association of New Jersey will be held at Orange, N. J., December 10th to 14th, 1901.

Since holding the fifth annual show, the Fanciers' Association of New Jersey became incorporated under the laws of Jersey. It is the intention of the Fanciers' Association to hold annual shows, selecting the different cities of the state each year. The coming show at Orange is being arranged for upon a scale in keeping with the magnitude of the poultry and pet stock interests of this state. It is anticipated that 1500 to 2000 specimens will be entered for competition. A large fund is subscribed to defray all expenses, also a big list of cash and other specials as premiums. The best obtainable judges and management, prompt payment of awards and fair dealing is promised. Premium list will be mailed on application. The following judges have been engaged: D. A. Nichols, P. H. Scudder, J. C. Haynes, J. J. Yelton, T. Farrar Rackham, John Glasgow, J. Robbins, John Behrsmann and several yet to hear from. Mr. T. Farrar Rackham is our superintendent.

THE PIGEON STANDARD just issued by C. E. Twombly, editor of the Pigeon News, is a book that fills a "long felt want." Poultry Don'ts and Nevers.

Let me make a few suggestions negatively:

Don't breed a Hamburg that has a single comb.

Never use a "clay-breasted" Partridge Cochin female.

Never use a Bronze turkey tom that has a slim shank.

Never use a bird that shows any tendency to knock-knees.

Never breed extremes in form or color if at all avoidable.

Never use a bird that has a natural deformity of any kind.

Never use a bird that is inferior in size to its sex of its breed.

Never use a hen turkey that is spindling and small for its breed.

Avoid white birds that have straw colored backs and wing bows.

Never discard goose or gander because of its age—the older the better.

Never use a pullet to sell eggs from until you have tested her laying qualities.

Never mate a male of any breed that is easily cowed by all the other males.

Never use one that has a scant leg and toe feathering, if a feather-legged breed.

Never use a Pekin duck that does not walk quite erect, nor one that has a short body.

Never use one of the pinkish white shanks if its breed calls for yellow or dark yellow shanks.

Don't breed a Brahma whose beak is oval instead of flat and whose shoulders are set angular.

Never breed from a fowl of doubtful merit as a producer. Know what you are doing in this respect.

Market instead of breeding Barred Rocks whose bars fail to reach entirely across the feather.

Never cross a breed of one kind on that of another. No cross-bred bird is as good as the straight goods.

Don't breed a Cochin whose back and saddle (or cushion) present a concave instead of convex curve.

Never use a Brown Leghorn that is more black than brown, nor one that is more yellow or mealy than seal brown.

Never use one with the least bit of down between toes or on shank, nor if it has any feathers on shanks, if it be of the bare-legged breed.

Never breed from a male Mediterranean whose wattles are shrunken and small, nor one of any breed whose head appendages are inferior in size.

Never use one that has a comb untypical of its supposed breed, as it indicates poor breeding, and his get will be likely to partake of this defect.

Never use a bird that shows any tendency to carry tail the least bit away—one that approaches to "wry tail," as defined by the Standard of Perfection.

Cast aside the Black Minorca that shows, when grown, the least bit of grey or white in any part of its plumage—unusually in prime wing feathers.

Never use a Brown Leghorn with the least grey or white in any part of the plumage except at roots of tail of males, nor one that is low and squatty on legs.

Never use a Silver or Golden Wyandotte female that has a back without white centers except a streak at shaft, nor one that has spangles at breast instead of lacing.

Never use a male of any breed that is dainty at the feed trough, nor one that is never noticed to serve, nor one that had roup when young and is apparently well.

Never use a Houdan that has a "top-knot" where there should be a good, big crest, nor one with four toes instead of five, nor one faded to nearly white in breast section.

The very first of all considerations should be in respect to constitution. Never breed from male or female that is not known to be vigorous, strong, active and from active, strong, vigorous parentage.

Never use a male of the feather-legged breeds that has what is known as "vulture hocks"—stiff, quilled feathers growing nearly straight out from the hock joint, except to females that are too scantily feathered on legs and not thin, unless the male shanks and toes show excessive feathering as well as "vultures."—S. L. Roberts in the San Francisco Post.

Storks in Constantinople.

One of the most interesting sights at this time of year in Constantinople is to watch the Storks rearing their young. Every year the old birds return to their former nests, which are generally placed on the flat tops of the Turkish chimneys. They are supposed to bring good luck, and rather than frighten them away a Turk will not use his kitchen chimney while they are in possession. The parents' bill of fare for their little ones is varied. A snake or frog is evidently a great delicacy, but the former gives its captor a very bad time. The writer has often seen a Stork coming home holding in its bill a long live snake, which all the time is trying to get hold of the bird's feet, which are tucked away as far as possible out of danger. When at last he arrives with his tit-bit, all the little Storks stand up and, throwing their heads back till their beaks rest on their backs, begin clapping their bills, just as if they were applauding with their hands. Sometimes the old bird is so pleased with this family tribute that, forgetting the snake, he indulges in a similar display, and the snake promptly wriggles off down the chimney. It is difficult to describe the disappointed air of the hungry group as they see their dinner disappear. One of the disadvantages of Storks' nests is the quantity of snakes and frogs which are constantly finding their way in this manner into the "lucky" house below. Here is a tragic story of Stork justice woefully misapplied. It is said to have been actually observed recently by a student of birds. Some unkind person put a strange egg in one of these homes on the house tops. When Mr. Stork came home he became very indignant and had long and stormy arguments with his wife. As she evidently could not explain the matter satisfactorily, he went off and collected a large number of his fellows, who, after carefully examining the strange egg, evinced anger equal to his own. They then withdrew a short distance and held an animated conference, after which they all returned and fell upon poor Mrs. Stork and killed her.—London Daily Telegraph

The Panama Canal.

PRESENT intimate commercial relations between the United States and the Republic of Columbia will probably result in the former securing and finishing the Panama Canal. Long headed capitalists, appreciating the wondertul natural resources of Columbia are investing in everything there. English Capitalists are working coal, iron and gold mines American capitalists are developing mining, railroad, steamship, rubber, coffee, cotton, timber, colonial and grazing enterprises. Many of the strongest and best known capitalists of Boston, New York and Chicago have invested in some of them. Among them may be mentioned:

T. Jefferson Coolidge, Fred L. Ames, Oliver Ames, John L Gardner, Albert W. Nickerson, J. Murray Forbes, Wm. H. Forbes, W. Powell Mason, Lawrence Minot, Joseph S. Fay, Jr., Henry D. Hyde, Geo. V. L. Meyey, Henry Parkman, Alan Curtis, Thos. R. Wheelock, Fred Ayer, James B. Colgate, J. A. Stewart, Morris K. Jessup, Gen. John Newton, Commodore James D. Smith, T. B. McConica and Charles R. Flint.

The International Copper Company,

In which a number of well known New York business men, among whom may be named Wm. R. Townsend, Arthur F. Carmody, Wm. H. Martin, Roswell Q. Stebbins, Walter C. Richards. R. H. Reddish, Henry A. Whiting, W. H. Hendee, Casius M. Gilbert and James C. Bright, are interested, controls nineteen rich copper concessions of about 107 acres each, making something over a hundred ordinary mining claims, together with timber, coal and limestone properties and water rights and water powers there.

Of these concessions the Consul General of Columbia at New York says:

"I do know that in the districts where they are located copper is found in very great abundance, and I have no doubt myself that these mining concessions will prove very rich in that metal upon being properly equipped and worked.

Columbia is a great mineral storehouse, which heretofore has been third in the production of gold and a very large producer of silver, but in the struggle for these precious metals the vast copper deposits have remained undeveloped. I am glad, as I know every Columbian will be, to see American and English capital now seeking these rich fields, for I am sure that investments could not be made anywhere with prospects for greater and more certain returns to capital than in the above region, which I believe will quickly develop into one of the greatest copper producing fields in the world."

Minorca, 'Tis of Thee.

Minorca, 'tis of thee, sweet bird so gay and free, of thee I sing.
Bird of our nation's pride, known on every side,
Of the queen so true and tried let praises ring.

My good Minorca thee, bird of the noble free, thy name we love.
We love thy eggs and feed you of the noble breed,
All say your fame and name are high above.

Your praises fill the trees, are heard on every breeze, "Minorca pet."
All other fowls give way, your fame is here to stay,
You take the lead of all, "you can bet."

Your worth and glory high, reaching to the sky, of you we sing.
Long live your "star" so bright, in clearest, brightest light,
And to you, the "queen" of all, rich prizes bright.

American Plymouth Rock Club.

Editor American Fancier: The eleventh annual meeting of the American Plymouth Rock Club will be held at Philadelphia, Pa., December 30th, 1901. A large attendance and a grand meeting is assured. Donations for special premiums should be had at once so that they may appear in the premium list with due credit to donors. By order of the executive committee a special meeting of the Club will be held at the Pan-American Poultry Exhibit, Buffalo, N. Y., Thursday, October 24th, 1901, an enthusiastic meeting is promised. The Club's special premiums added to those of the exposition insures a large and choice display of Barred Plymouth Rocks. All are invited to meet with us at the Pan-American. Arrange your visit so you will be there for the meeting. The Club's new catalogue tells all about us and everything pertaining to Barred Plymouth Rocks. It is mailed free for 4 cents postage. Come with us, we now have over 700 members and want to make it 1000 by next meeting. The initiation fee is $1 and the annual dues 50 cents. Write to H. P. SCHWAB,

M. S. Gardner Still Breeds Plymouth Rocks.

Editor American Fancier: Have just seen the American Fancier for September 14th. In some manner you have been misinformed in regard to Mr. Lamon's purchase of birds. I have not sold all of my Barred Rocks and have not retired from the fancy. Have never intended to do so and never gave any one liberty to publish any such statement. On the contrary, I have all of my this year's chicks and consider them the best I ever raised. Have retained about 150 of my last year's breeders, many of them New York, Johnstown and Boston winners. I also have in my yards the sire and dams of my 1st, 2d and 5th New York cockerels (1901) with all the chicks raised from them this year. Will you kindly publish this in your next issue. M. S. GARDNER.

To Whom It May Concern.

This is to certify that we have this day sold and shipped our entire flock of African and Toulouse Geese and Cayuga Ducks (including all our winners at Hagerstown and Philadelphia) and balance of our flock of Embden Geese to Mr. E. A. Weimer, Lebanon, Pa., proprietor of the Exmoor Farms, and would respectfully recommend Mr. Weimer as now owning the best flock of these varieties in the country.

Fancy Pheasants and Their Allies.

ELLIOT'S, COPPER AND REEVES' PHEASANTS.

These birds bear a close general resemblance in form and habits to the species last described and are generally classed by naturalists in the same genus. They differ, however, in some minor points, and especially in that the cocks have the saddle composed of ordinary firm rounded feathers.

The hens bear a general resemblance to those of the common Pheasant type, but are of a warmer brown, and have tails with the outer pairs of feathers more or less cinnamon tipped with white. They are also sufficiently distinct from each other to be recognized without any special difficulty.

The species are all hardy enough, but not so easy to manage as some of the others.

ELLIOT'S PHEASANT.

The plumage of the male of this species is very peculiar and characteristic. The general hue is a very rich golden bay without lacing, but varied by a white belly and two white bars on the wing. The head and neck are whitish grey, with the throat black all the way down to the breast; the saddle is black laced with white and the tail pale grey barred with cinnamon. Altogether the bird looks like some even-marked fancy breed; he is about the size of the common Pheasant.

The hen's mottled brown plumage is diversified by white in the centre of the belly and black on the throat, markings which will distinguish her from any other hen Pheasant.

This species comes from China, and John Chinaman condescends to send out true pairs of it. It does not seem to thrive in captivity so well as some other species, and the cock is addicted to the cruel habit of killing the female, in common with the next species. Such birds, of course, want careful watching, and besides the plan of tying the legs I recommended in the introduction, it might be well to try clipping the cock's wings and allowing the hen full power of flight, with a shelf to retire to on which some food and water could be placed. The paroxysm of unnatural fury appears to come on after pairing in this species and the next; but it is probably often caused by coldness or obstinacy on the part of the hen—in some cases, at all events. At any rate, the more liberty the birds have the less likely are such dispositions to manifest themselves or give rise to fatal results.

THE COPPER OR SOEMMERING'S PHEASANT

Not only gold and silver, but also the baser metal are represented in the feathers of the Pheasant family, for the present bird well deserves its name, the male being of a warm brown, with a rich copper head and neck and bright copper pencilling on the back and saddle. There is a "sport" formerly named as a species—the Sparkling Pheasant—in which there is also some white pencilling on the saddle, but this is not now considered as distinct, as it occurs together with the type. The tail in both is buff barred with cinnamon, and is proportionately longer than that of the common Pheasant, though the bird itself is not larger.

The hen, however, has a shorter tail than the common Pheasant hen; she is of a mottled brown color without any specially characteristic point except the white tipped cinnamon outer tail feathers, which will at once distinguish her from any hen Pheasant of similar type except Elliot's, which has special markings of her own, as detailed above.

The Copper Pheasant is a Japanese bird, but, unlike the Green, is not found in nearly all the islands, but only in Hondo and Kiu-siu. The male has a most unpleasant note, like the filing of a saw; in captivity, as above remarked, he has a very bad character for ruffianly behavior to his wife. But he certainly is a splendid looking bird in his rich, though comparatively sober, plumage, which many people would admire more than the brighter and more strongly contrasted hues of other well known Pheasants. I read a story some time back entitled "The Copper Pheasant," in which the heroine had copied a dress, the wearing of which caused a great deal of complication, from the plumage of this bird, an example which might be followed with regard to other species—at any rate, for "fancy dress" purposes, if not for every day wear.

REEVES' PHEASANT.

First described by Marco Polo, the celebrated Venetian traveller in the Middle Ages, this splendid Pheasant was very long in getting introduced to the general body of European naturalists. Now, however, it bids fair to be particularly well known, having been turned out to breed in the open in several parts of the British Islands, for, as a native of North China, it is found very hardy even in Scotland.

It is a very big bird, as large as the major breeds of poultry, and the cock's tail is disproportionately long, reaching nearly two yards in the centre feathers. The color is equally striking in this sex, being generally of a golden yellow laced with black; on the flat of the wing and the flanks, however, the ground color is white and the lacing black and chocolate respectively. The crown is white and the face black, succeeded by a white collar and then by another black one. The tail is pale grey barred with black. The hen is very beautifully mottled with two shades of brown and has a dark head, with buff eyebrows and throat, and some white speckling on the upper back. Her tail is not much longer in proportion than that of the ordinary hen Pheasants, but her size and peculiar markings will distinguish her from the hen of any other species.

The length of this bird's tail makes a large space necessary if that appendage is to be kept in show condition, and so it is less suitable for amateurs than most other species, in spite of its great beauty and very unique appearance. The young also are not very easy to rear in confinement, although doing well in the open. As I said above, this species has been taken up as a sporting bird and is now regularly shot in some places, and may even appear in the market. It is eminently suited for this purpose, being very showy, a very rapid flier, and excellent for the table.

On this account it is likely to become more popular and eggs for placing under ordinary Pheasants to be in demand. But it should be mentioned that for shooting this species should only be turned out in hilly, broken ground with heavy undergrowth, so that the birds cannot run along as they would otherwise do, but have to rise at once, affording a magnificent spectacle and a chance for a shot. A curious fact is that, although so rapid on the wing, the cock Reeves' Pheasant can stop dead by turning short and spreading his long tail, which thus acts as a brake. Mr. J. G. Millais, so well known as an artist and sportsman, has given a most beautiful drawing of the bird in the act, which is reproduced in the last edition of Mr. Tegetmeier's work, and reminds one strikingly of Japanese pictures. Reeves' Pheasant is a very quiet species, the cock's note being a most remarkable one for a bird of the kind—a feeble pipe like that of some little songbird. This noble Pheasant has been crossed with the ordinary mongrel birds and with the Ring-necked Pheasant, the progeny once, at all events, in the latter case proving fertile. But this is not usually the case in hybrids from this Pheasant with its relatives, and both from this cause and from the disposition of the species to drive away the ordinary Pheasants, it does not get intermixed with them.

Before leaving the long-tailed Pheasants, it is well to mention a few other species which are sometimes heard of but seldom obtainable. The White-winged Pheasant comes from the western frontier of Afghanistan; it is much like the old colchicus, but with white wings. It frequents swampy reed beds and swims and wades like a Moorhen. Thus it would be a very good bird for localities too damp for ordinary poultry or game. It has been once exhibited in the London Zoological Gardens. Another fine species, the Mongolian Pheasant, is now exhibited there. The cock is very like the colchicus, but has a narrow white collar and pearl eyes and is a larger bird.

The Cheer Pheasant is a Himalayan species of dull plumage, the cock being little brighter than the hen. The tail is like that of the common Pheasant, but both cock and hen bear a projecting crest like some Kaleeges.

The Koklass is also Himalayan and has a tail of pointed shape, but rather short. The cock has a dark green head with three crests, two long ones at the sides and a shorter one in the middle. His body plumage is chocolate, silver grey and black, the colors varying so much in extent that it is doubtful how many species there are; probably there is only one, which is now breaking up into different varieties which have not yet become fixed. The hen is mottled brown and may be distinguished from all other hen Pheasants of similar style by having all her feathers pointed instead of rounded, as in most birds, the same peculiarity occurring in the cock.

It should be recollected that only long and sharp tailed Pheasants are of use for sporting purposes, except the Monaul, which splendid bird really deserves, as I said when treating of him, complete domestication, although quite fit to figure as a game bird.—F. The Furniture City's Big Show.

Editor American Fancier: Grand Rapids, Mich., is known the world over as the furniture city, and after December 20th it will be known as one of the best poultry show cities in the country. This city is the home of as fine a lot of hustling fanciers of all kinds as you will meet in many a week's travel, and they decided nearly a year ago to give a show this winter and they have been planning it ever since. Michigan and near-by breeders ought to be there in force and will be. Classes for everything and cash and specials for you all if you have the quality to win. Good judges for all classes. Fine premium list for the asking. Send your address on a postal card to-day to Wentzel Demo, secretary, or the writer will forward you one as soon as published.

SEPTEMBER 10 TO 14.

The poultry, pigeons and pet stock at the New York State Fair this year made up about 2000 entries. The same building and same coops were used as in the past two years. This is enough to handicap any show. The building on the outside is quite handsome; on the inside it is entirely unfitted for a display of fowls, the light, what little can enter being on the sides when it should enter from the top. The coops are small, wooden and piled three tiers high. To examine fowls in such quarters is rather difficult and the judges had to remove them to a place in the aisle where light was sufficiently plentiful to enable them to compare the birds.

The management however was excellent, Superintendent Jacquins and his assistants doing exceedingly fine work in classifying and handling the exhibits.

The judges were C. E. Rockenstyre, J. Y Bicknell, M. Davenport and Mr. Barker.

A catalogue of the entries was an excellent guide for visitors. Nearly all the poultry papers were represented and misrepresented here.

It is simply impossible to give a description of the winners owing to the poor light in the building and the sign posted which forbids poking and handling birds. A general round-up of the classes showed some very fine Barred, White and Buff Rocks, a good display of White Wyandottes and an unusually fine lot of Buff Wyandottes. Asiatics were a fairly good lot in Cochins and Brahmas and a strong collection in Langshans. Leghorns strong in quality in all classes. Minorcas very weak in numbers and not particularly good in quality except in a few winners. Polish, Hamburgs and Houdans good in all classes. Dorkings quite numerous and good in quality.

Games fairly well represented. Indian Games made a good showing, the Whites bringing out some splendid youngsters.

There was only an average display of Bantams as far as numbers were concerned, the big strings of A. E. Blunck and John Glasgow being absent owing to a mistake in the time of the closing of entries. Still there was sufficient quality to make up for the paucity of entries. The usual exhibit of turkeys, ducks and geese prevailed. An excellent display of Belgian hares caused Judge Barker to do some acrobatic stunts on the floor in trying to place the ribbons.

A Feather Duster.

Seven fluffy little chickens belonging to a family living on Twelfth street, near Broadway, have a queer mother. For the past two weeks the only protection they have had has been a big feather duster. The substitute for the mother has served its purpose so well that the family expects to raise chickens in the same way every year.

The chickens were hatched about three weeks ago, their mother being an old hen which the family had bought in market and intended to fatten and eat. Before she arrived at the proper condition to be baked she took a notion to set. As is usual in such cases persuasion was vain, and she held to her determination to raise a family. A dozen eggs were given her and she hatched out eight chicks. Of these she was very proud. About two weeks ago a number of friends from out of town visited the family unexpectedly. The problem of what to have for dinner was a serious one, as it was Sunday and no groceries were open. It was suggested that the hen be killed, but the children were not willing that the chickens should be left to shift for themselves at so tender an age.

The problem was solved by the boy, who suggested that the hen be killed and the big feather duster be substituted for the hen. The duster was suspended just above the floor in the corner of the kitchen and the chickens placed under it in a box. There they have remained ever since and are growing rapidly. They seem to take kindly to the innovation, and at the first sign of danger they all retreat to the duster, nestling among the feathers.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

ASTHMA CURE FREE!

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in all Cases.

SENT ABSOLUTELY FREE ON RECEIPT OF POSTAL.

WRITE YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS PLAINLY.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,
Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.
New York, Jan. 3, 1901.

Drs. Taft Bros'. Medicine Co.,
Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.
After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,
REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

Avon Springs, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

Dr. Taft Bros. Medicine Co.
Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 130th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

Dr. Taft Bros. Medicine Co. Feb. 5, 1901.
Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

Moulting.

It is now full time that the adults which are likely to be wanted for exhibition at the leading shows, should be getting rid of their old plumage. If they are not beginning to moult of their own accord some artificial means of starting a moult may be tried. Shutting the birds in very warm houses or pens, and giving them a little hempseed mixed with their other grain food, is the best plan for cocks and non-sitting hens. Hens of the sitting breeds should be allowed to lie a few weeks if possible before being treated as above suggested.

The natural time for fowls to moult is when the principal work of the year is done, and when the thin, worn out plumage, that has been more than sufficient during the summer months, must give place to new and better clothing for the winter. It is a great strain on the constitution of the fowl, and could not be carried on if any other effort were required at the same time. When, then, the natural season for laying, sitting and rearing a brood is over, the whole remaining energies of the bird are thrown into the formation of a new plumage. The older the bird gets the longer the process lasts, but it generally comes to a satisfactory conclusion, except where heating food and spiced condiments are used.

It should be remembered that as a general rule hens will not moult so long as they are laying, and also that a very full state of the system is bad for the commencement of a moult. It is best, therefore, to allow the birds before they commence moulting to get rather below their usual condition, and then as they progress in the moult to gradually increase the feeding and thus get them into their best form just at the time when they are most wanted for exhibition. Show birds are to a certain extent like athletes, and can more easily be got into form for one or two events than kept a long time in high condition. Let the system of feeding now adopted be such, therefore, as to rather bring down the weight of those of the birds which are unduly heavy, and stop the laying of the hens. Scanty meals of non stimulating food will do this. Birds that are in low condition, or are of weakly constitution, must not be included in this regimen, or their systems may be too much reduced to stand the strain of moult.

The food during the moulting time should be nourishing and cooling. Ground oats slaked with milk are very good; lettuces are excellent; barley meal and fine sharps, sopped bread, groats from gruel, are all beneficial. All stimulants are bad. A cool body is essential to the formation of healthy feathers. The stub that is to form the feather must have a cool and moist bed in which to grow. Such food as we have named will supply it. Stimulants and heating food dry up all the nutriment of the embryo, and it dies away Inexperienced people often advise feeding entirely on hempseed. Nothing can be worse; nothing is more heating. The effect of feeding a moulting bird on hempseed entirely, and then continuing it as the staple food, is to turn the plumage nearly black. Where birds are fed on it when the plumage should be growing, the feathers die before they gain maturity. Blackened stubs take the place of a bright and healthy plumage, itching follows, and the bird, to allay it, positively eats away the flesh. This is more especially the case with the flight feathers of the wing. Sugar has the same effect on parrots. Some breeds moult more easily than others, and we are almost disposed to say that non-sitters are bad moulters.

The white breeds and such of the other kinds that turn yellow through exposure to the sun, must be moulted in some place where there is not any strong sunlight. Many fanciers moult them in houses on straw, but unless the birds be delicate we hardly approve of this. Nothing takes the stamina out of a healthy bird so much as long confinement in a house; and although no evil results may at once appear, the effects will probably show themselves in the ensuing breeding season in infertile eggs and weakly chickens. If the necessary amount of shade can be secured by any other means we never pen our birds to moult, but allow them as much liberty as possible on every fine day.—Poultry, England.

Pigeon Flying at the Pan.

Editor American Fancier: At a meeting of the Pittsburg Fanciers' Club held on September 9th, 1901, it was decided to donate a silver cup, to be competed for by members of the National Association and Federation Clubs, said fly to be from Buffalo to Pittsburg, on Saturday, October 5th, 1901. An entrance fee of 20 cents per bird will be charged, to be paid to the secretary of the Homestead Club, which pays all expenses, such as express, countermarking, and liberation of birds at Buffalo, which will be done by a member of the Pittsburg Fanciers' Club.

The following rules were made to govern the fly: All those who intend to compete to notify Emil Nue, secretary Homestead Club, not later than October 1st, how many birds they intend to enter; also to have all birds at Homestead Club headquarters not later than 1 p. m. Friday, Oct. 4th, 1901.

They also left the selection of the cup to three pigeon fanciers, so that if the trophy is not a handsome one it will not be the fault of the Pittsburg Fanciers' Club.

PET STOCK.

The Size of Litters.

Editor American Fancier: In nearly every panegyric upon the Belgian Hare its fecundity is the prevailing note. Nine, ten, a dozen at a birth seems to be the special word of praise. This phenomenal fecundity is claimed as a special virtue and adds a special value to its possessor. But while there is no denying this quality, for the Belgian Hare is a very prolific breeder, yet it may well be asked if such large litters are after all desirable.

Nature, in the organization of the doe, seems to have hinted at a certain limit of rational productiveness, for she has strictly limited the number of teats.

If more young are produced in a litter than the number of teats all of them cannot nurse at the same time, and, unless the flow of milk is very copious, some of them will be in danger of lacking sufficient nutriment for the support of life.

But apart from this seeming natural limit, are large litters after all desirable? If the sole or the main object in breeding hares were to multiply their number as rapidly as possible, the larger the litters, provided the doe could manage to keep them alive, the better it would be But the main object ought not to be how many but how good hares can be bred. A few good ones are worth more to the breeder, both in reputation and in cash, than many mediocre or poor ones. A reputation as a breeder cannot be built up by producing numbers but by producing high qualities, and sales at good prices will depend upon the merits of the animals produced. Hares will not be sold, at least at high prices, like eggs, by the dozen, but they will be sold singly, in pairs and in trios upon their individual merits.

But will limiting the number in a litter have any effect upon the quality of the hares? I believe that it will. The size will be improved and perhaps color and other characteristics if the doe is allowed to suckle but a few young.

Years ago, when, as a lad, I was breeding English rabbits of various colors, a white doe, usually a prolific breeder, gave birth to but two young ones. I was naturally somewhat disappointed in the size of the litter, but I was delighted with the growth that these two young rabbits made. The extra nourishment that they derived from their dam made them grow like well-fed ducks, and even after they were weaned, the momentum in growth which they had received continued to carry them forward. At maturity they were the largest rabbits which, at that time, I had ever seen, the buck being to my eyes of enormous size.

A recent instance of a similar nature has come under my observation. A near neighbor is a breeder of Belgian Hares. One of his does produced a good sized litter, but for some reason only two of the young lived. These two young hares are now about two and a half months old, but they are as large as many are at four months of age. And they are growing rapidly. Unless some accident should check their growth they will as adults be considerably larger than any of the other rabbits belonging to this gentleman.

Last winter a prominent breeder of Belgian Hares told me that one of his does lost through cold all of her litter but a single rabbit. That one solitary specimen had all the nourishment he could assimilate. And this gentleman said that the young hare was nearly double the size of others in his rabbitry of the same age.

These instances are in harmony with observed facts concerning other live stock. I well remember that, when I was a boy, my father, who was a breeder of horses, had a colt foaled by a smallish mare and sired by one of the stallions on the stock farm. This colt, in addition to the milk supplied by his dam, was regularly fed upon grain as soon as he would eat it, and his growth was something remarkable. He developed into a fine looking horse, considerably larger than his sire or dam. I have noticed similar results in rearing chickens. Those which make rapid growth during the first few weeks of their existence are almost invariably the largest and finest specimens at maturity.

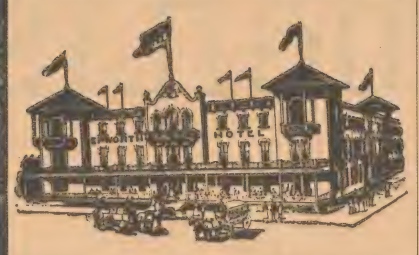
From such observations as I have been able to make I am thoroughly convinced that the initial advantage gained by extra nourishment during the first few weeks of existence is preserved, accidents excepted, throughout the whole period of development, and that in raising live stock, as well as in almost everything else, a good start is of inestimable value.

And not only is size affected by a good start, but I believe that figure is also to some extent dependent upon full nourishment. A half starved, stunted animal, bird, tree or plant usually is less symmetrical than one that grows vigorously. In the human family dwarfs are notoriously illy proportioned. At the time I was engaged upon "The Philosophy of Judging" certain measurements made of large fowls and Bantams convinced me that the proportions of the little fowls were somewhat different from those of the large fowls. And I have noticed that Bantam chickens, hatched so late in the season as to become stunted by cold, were seldom or never so finely proportioned as those whose growth had not been retarded. While it is difficult to measure the effects of retarded growth in the symmetry of an animal, still I believe that some effect is produced and that the most perfect symmetry is dependent upon continuous unchecked growth.

I am also of the opinion that perfection of color is, in some degree, dependent upon unretarded growth. We know altogether too little about color, but "it is becoming more and more evident," says a writer in The British Medical Journal, "that the origin of pigment is bound up with the chemistry of growth and the physiological functions of living organisms." The character of the food is known to have effect, in some instances at least, upon the color, and it seems not unreasonable to suppose that the abundance or scarcity of food may have a similar result, either directly by a full nourishment of the pigment cells, or indirectly through the effect of the more or less rapid growth of the body and the chemical changes incident thereto.

While we may be somewhat uncertain concerning the effect of abundant nourishment upon the color and the symmetry of the hare, it seems to me reasonably well demonstrated that size is directly affected thereby. But is increased size desirable? I believe that it is. If the Belgian Hare is to be reckoned with as a market animal, if it is to successfully compete in the market with its brother, the Flemish Giant, increased size is very desirable. And if increased size is desirable, and such increase can be obtained by limiting the number of young to be brought up by a doe, then small litters are indispensable.

But how small should the litters be? This is not an easy question to answer, because some does are much better milkers than others and can, therefore, rear larger litters successfully. I believe, however, that no doe should be allowed to suckle more than six young, and that for most does four are enough. And, if the breeder wishes to secure the most perfect results, only one or two young should be permitted to live.



But how can one cull the litters and be certain that he has killed only the poorest and permitted the best ones to live? Quality will not be likely to be improved very rapidly if the best young are slaughtered as fast as they are born and the poorest ones only allowed to develop.

Speaking only of the red, the original variety of the Belgian Hare, my advice would be to remove at the start, before the hair has developed, the feeblest only of the young. There will always be some less vigorous at birth than the others, and this lack of vigor is a very good point to begin the culling upon. A little later, when the fur has grown sufficiently to give some indication of probable color, others could be removed. A very little experience will enable a breeder to detect, even at this early age, the specimens which will be too dark and too gray in color. White markings, also, will show in the earliest fur, and all such could be removed. This would enable the breeder to cull out, first, the feeble specimens; second, the grayer specimens; third, the specimens with undesirable white markings. And the removal of these three classes, probably in most cases, would sufficiently reduce the litter in numbers. Beyond this, with our present knowledge, I hardly know how to advise for further culling, in the cases where the three points mentioned do not fully complete the operation.

I am satisfied, however, that the time will come when, through further observation and study, our knowledge will be sufficiently complete to enable a breeder to predict with reasonable certainty from very early indications the adult coloration of the hares. The breeder will be able to do this from the first fur most certainly and perhaps from the color of the skin. There is probably some relation between the color of the skin when the hare is first born and the color of the fur when maturity has been reached. We know that this is true in the case of pigeons, for in a nest containing two, one only of which will be yellow, a skillful breeder can select with absolute precision, before a feather has started to grow, the young bird which will have a yellow plumage. And if this can be done with pigeons, as it certainly can be, why should not something similar be possible with hares? And if this be possible, it will be possible only by making a careful study of the relation between the appearance of the new-born young and the color and markings which they will possess at maturity. Such knowledge is necessary to enable us to cull out confidently the poor specimens, so as to limit the number of the litter and be certain to preserve the best specimens. The breeder who first acquires this knowledge and acts fearlessly upon it will possess a decided advantage over his fellow breeders in the production of the most perfect Belgian Hares. And the breeder who can produce the most perfect hares will always find a demand in excess of the supply, high prices as the result of such conditions, and prosperity as a final resultant. The market never is and never will be overstocked with the best. The poor, in hares as in men, we have always with us. To get rid of these at a profit above their value as meat, hic opus, hic labor est, so that our best efforts should be directed to eliminating as rapidly and as completely as possible the poor from the products of our breeding and applying the best devices and best methods of securing the most perfect development of the best specimens produced. One such device, I believe, will be found in limiting the size of the litters and culling out, as near the time of birt has possible, the decidedly inferior specimens.

OIL AND GOLD FILL A POOR PUGILIST'S POCKETS.

THE LITTLE WIFE WHO DID IT AIL IS DEAD.

"Billy" Manning, who played in hard luck three months ago, returns to New York a real millionaire.

Dead Wife's Investments in Desert "Fruit Growing" land in California now Full of Gushing Wells.

Grub-Stake to a Reporter-Prospector Make Him Half Owner in a Mine Yielding $20,000 Monthly.

Into the Fifth Avenue Hotel lobby last night walked "Billy" Manning, retired light weight pugilist and first boxing instructor of Champion James Jefferies.

He wore a big diamond in his scarf. A bundle of money in his waistcoat spoiled the set of his very correct frock coat. "I am making a tour of the world," said Manning, "and I am stopping at this hotel while some tailors are doing business for me."

Manning was in town three months ago. His abode then was the Eureka Hotel, in the Bowery. He wore at that time a summer serge suit, and the wintry winds found free passage through it.

When the first Mrs. Manning was alive ("Becky," her husband called her), she took care of the winnings and savings of her husband. She got an idea that "Arroyo seco" land was good to raise fruit on, and bought small tracts all around Los Angeles, California. "Arroyo seco" land is dry river bed, and nothing has been persuaded to grow on it.

While Manning was in the straits described last winter he got a letter from California, requesting him to go out there and meet some persons who wished to buy some of his land. A check for expenses was enclosed. He saw his lawyer first and was advised not to sell. Oil had been struck around his property, and every foot of his land was in the oil belt. He followed advice and one of his wells, a 1,000-barrel gusher, is giving him $800 a day profit. Manning became a millionaire.

There was more luck in store for Manning. Years ago he had "grub-staked" F. M. Mooers, who was a Brooklyn Eagle reporter twenty years ago. Mooers never found gold until a year ago in the Landsberg district of California. At last, when he was eating the last of his beans and drinking the last of the water which he had "packed" many miles, he said: "Before I quit I will go up that gulch for one more try." He found a nugget worth $1,000, and staked out claims which now include the Yellow Aster mine, paying $20,000 a month.

Because of his grub-stakes, Manning has become half owner in the Yellow Aster. Mooers is with Manning in the round-the-world trip. Paris, St Petersburg, Cairo, Bombay and the Philippines are in their route.

"I want to see the famine country in India," said Mooers. "I am somewhat of an expert in famine myself, and can sympathize."

"Automobiles and first cabins are on our programme," said Manning.

What man has done, man can do again. The above is simply one case in a thousand.

Richard Ellis, of Los Angeles, invested $100 in oil stock, and within one year sold out at a net profit of $31,620,000.

Mr. John L. Bunting invested $170, and is now rated a millionaire.

It is those who fear to back their own judgment who always remain poor. Opportunity is all a true man can ask. Never before or probably again will there be such grand opportunities as are offered today in the California Oil fields. Among the many you will not find a better or more honest proposition than that offered by the Northern Consolidated Oil & Mining Co., No. 2.

This Company is a dividend payer and ranks among the best in the State; owns and controls thousands of acres of oil land in the various districts of California and Texas, and already have a large number of producing wells. In order to rush development work at any first-class hotel or restaurant includes chicken in some form. It is a task for caterers to get nice plump poultry, especially during the early fall. Most flocks are well fed, but lice and mites are allowed free course in the coops and on the birds and this will prevent the hens from laying and the chickens from growing more than any other one thing in the business. This is where Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies come in.

MOUNTAIN SIDE LOFTS AND BANTAM Yards, Mahwa, N. J., Havemeyer Bros, Proprietors.—To parties on the lookout for exhibition stock for the coming fall shows in Game and Variety Bantams we have to announce that, having hada successful season, we are prepared to supply their requirements in either young or old stock and of the kind that can hold their own in the hottest competition. In a recent article from the pen of A. E. Blunck of Johnstown, N. Y., published in the American Fancier, he stated that when showing against stock from Mountain Side, he knew he was "up against the real thing." Enough said. Why buy elsewhere when such an authority tells you where you can get "the real thing?" Our prices are reasonable in accordance with quality. The "real thing" is always cheap. Anything but the "real thing" in Bantams is dear at any price. All inquiries for stock should be addressed to the Manager, JOHN GLASGOW. 14-21

A FALL FAIR is a good place to show the product of your skill at poultry raising. The competition is such that no lousy, skinny birds stand a ghost of a show in winning any of the best prizes. You can use Lambert's Death to Lice Powder on your birds while they are in the show coops, but to get most benefit from this remedy it should be used for weeks before showing.

THE REGULAR FARE of every well kept poultry yard includes all the necessities for growth, fattening and the production of eggs. You can feed everything under the sun, and house the flocks in gilt-edged palaces, and still you will need to treat them for lice or they will continually harbor vermin. Grain is now too high in price to feed a lot of lice. You can save the cost of many a box of Lambert's Death to Lice on your feed bills by using it often and liberally.

A FAIR OFFER: We put up four remedies for poultry vermin to cover all the demands in this line. We sell in all sizes of package from 10c each upwards, and send samples postpaid for this price in everything but "Liquid" which is not mailable. We agree to return the money if not satisfactory in every way. We send a 64-page book by mail free to everyone sending their address. If you are in a hurry send 10c. at same time stating what kind of lice you desire to knock out and we will mail trial package. 73–34

"RINGLETS" SOAR STILL HIGHER.

AT THE IMPERIAL SHOW OF THE NATION—
MADISON SQUARE GARDEN, N, Y., THE WORLD'S RECORD OF

E. B. THOMPSON'S BARRED PLYMOUTH ROCKS

4 YEARS IN SUCCESSION was the most remarkable ever achieved in the realm of poultry exhibitions. This record is by many points the highest ever accomplished in the annals of the New York Show; Winning during 4 years in succession MORE THAN THREE TIMES AS MANY 1ST PRIZES as any other exhibitor, and as many 1ST PRIZES as ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED, besides more than twice as many cups and specials as all, including the superb challenge Trophy, value $100, for best cock, cockerel, hen, pullet and exhibition pen; $100 Sterling Silver Cup for finest exhibit, Grand Special Prize Sweepstakes Cup value $100 presented by the President for best P. Rock cock, cockerel, hen and pullet, any variety. My clean sweep of on pullets has never been approached in Madison Square Garden, and stands alone and unequaled.

FIRST, SECOND, THIRD, FOURTH AND FIFTH PRIZES

The world's record of 1st on exhibition pen at New York 3 years in succession is the undisputed Champion. With their 1900 record the "RINGLETS" have won at New York a grand total of 77 PRIZES, 31 of these prizes are 1st and specials, being 17 more 1st and special prizes than won by any competitor in the history of the show. Rare bargains in yearling breeders in lots of a trio or 100. Show bird fit to win in the fastest company. Richly illustrated 24 page catalogue on application. Elegant breeders in any number. Eggs from finest exhibition matings, 1 sitting, $5; 2 sittings, $9; 3 sittings, $12; 4 sittings, $15. ADDRESS 91-tf

"Profitable Poultry Keeping in All its Branches."

This is the title of the new and elegant Catalogue issued by the Cyphers Incubator Co., for 1901. It contains 224 pages, 8x11 inches in size, over 200 fine new half-tone illustrations and a wealth of interesting, down-to-date matter, covering the subject of Poultry for Profit in all its branches.

This is a Brand New Book,

not a re-hash of old ones. Contains special articles written by experts, and illustrates and describes over fifty of America's largest and most successful Duck, Broiler, Roaster and Egg Farms. It also contains the endorsements of over one hundred of the foremost breeders of this country—men and women who are using the Cyphers Incubators—and shows photographic views of many of their poultry plants and favorite poultry houses. MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15. one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

Spratts Patent will again coop, feed and fit up the New York show. This shows the great resources of this old firm, as a similar contract must be fulfilled at Boston the same week. Involving as it does over ten thousand coops, the magnitude of the undertaking is obvious. But Squire T. Farrer Rackham is equal to such emergencies and will pull off both functions in that easy, graceful manner so characteristic of him.

Mr. John L. Cost, Hagerstown, Md., writes: "Kindly call attention in the American Fancier of all exhibitors who are going to ship their birds from Hagerstown to the Pan to notify me and to also state if they are going along with their birds, so I can make arrangements accordingly. It will also be well for the judges to go direct to Buffalo from here, as there will not be time enough for them to get back to their respective homes and then start for the Pan. The banquet will be held Wednesday instead of Thursday night. The exhibits promise to be very large, many new fanciers having applied for entry blanks."

We hope exhibitors will carefully note what Mr. Cost says and write him immediately. The trip from Hagerstown to Buffalo is a very pleasant one and cuts off considerable mileage, being a most direct route.

The following interesting letter of an English visit to Game and Game Bantam fanciers by Mr. C. R. Crowe, Guelph, Ont., appeared in the National Fanciers' Journal, and we take pleasure in reprinting it:

"While in England last July I took occasion to visit some of the prominent breeders of Game and Game Bantams. As I have kept Game Bantams since I was ten years old, starting off with a Walton Pile cockerel costing £5, you may surmise how interested I was in what I saw and how thoroughly able to appreciate it all. The first yard I visited was the splendidly appointed establishment of Mr. C. Bothway, Wisbeck. Mr. Bothway makes a specialty of Brown Red Games, and his wonderful collection of prizes and cups attest to his ability as a breeder and exhibitor of this beautiful variety. He has succeeded in producing cocks and hens with that lovely golden lemon lacing throughout, showing none of that mossy brown so common to Brown Reds seen in this country. A long row of cock pens was first visited and some ten cocks inspected, all winners at crack English shows and all showing that station, shortness of feather, clear distinct coloring, symmetry and vigor so dear to the Game breeder's heart. We then passed through several small fields, in each of which was a single house containing one cock and large flocks of hens, the breeders of his this year's chicks. Some of them were, of course, cockerel breeders, but the majority of them were perfect in body color and with grandly laced breasts, every feather edged with gold. Mr. Bothway assured me that he was having very poor luck in raising chicks this year. I may say, however, that I should very much like to be the possessor of what I saw. After partaking of Mr. Bothway's hospitality and arranging for a pen of his cracks to accompany me back to Canada, I took train for Ormskirk, the home of E. C. Stretch, the celebrated Bantam breeder. It was here my good fortune to see the most perfectly colored, clear winged pen of about twenty-five Pile Bantam females that I ever saw, quality one cannot describe. Of his many fine Pile cocks one bird in particular took my eye; his hackle, saddle, back and wing bars were all a perfectly even light orange color, and this, coupled with great reach, hard feathers, and a tail like a cigar in size, made a bird that has won all over England. Mr. Stretch's Black Reds, Brown Reds and Duckwings were all inspected in turn, and in each variety he has exhibition specimens of surpassing quality. I induced Mr. Stretch to part with a trio of Piles and a Black Red cock and came away happy. I also intended to visit Mr. Entwisle, of Wakefield, as I had spent a very enjoyable day with him in 1899, but was prevented at the last minute. Mr. Entwisle sent me a pair of Brown Red Bantams to Liverpool."

At the annual meeting of the American Poultry Association held at Chicago, Ill., January 24, 1901, a committee was appointed to revise and edit the Standard of Perfection and the constitution and by-laws of said society. This committee is to meet at the Pan-American Exposition, Buffalo, N. Y., during the week of the poultry show and report at a special meeting of the American Poultry Association to be held October 25. The committee appointed is as follows: J. H. Drevenstedt, Johnstown, N. Y.; F. B. Zimmer, Gloversville, N. Y.; B. N. Pierce, Indianapolis, Ind.; W. S. Russell, Ottumwa, Iowa, and Franklane L. Sewell, New Troy, Michigan. Members of the society, as well as readers of the American Fancier and other poultry journals, who desire to aid the committee by suggesting changes, improvements, amendments, or calling attention to errors and omissions, should send written statements embodying their ideas to either one of the members mentioned above on or before October 15.

The following goose lore we clip from the editorial page of our esteemed English contemporary, Poultry:

"September, when by custom, right divine,
Geese are ordained to bleed at Michael's shrine.

But the custom is wearing out, for one who well knows the poultry market tells us that 'this custom is falling off yearly, and Christmas is the time of the best goose market.' This is recurring nearer to the time when our ancestors caroused over roasted goose—namely, on St. Martin's Day, November 11th, and George tells the usual custom when he wrote—

To belly cheer, yet once again doth
Martin more incline,
Whom all the people worshipeth
With roasted goose and wine

This is still the usual evil time for geese on the Continent. Eating goose at Michaelmas, however, was also a very early custom in England, for as far back as the tenth year of the reign of Edward IV (1471) John de la Haye was bound to render to William Barnaby, Lord of Lastres, in the county of Hereford, for a part of the demense land, one goose fit for the Lord's dinner on the Feast of St. Michael the Archangel. This overturns the popular tradition that goose is eaten at this festival because Queen Elizabeth was dining off this bird when she first heard of the destruction of the Spanish Armada, and set the fashion by annually dining off the bird on the anniversary of that day. This tradition, however, has still stronger refutation, for the public thanksgiving for the destruction of the Armada took place on the 20th of August!

The above reminds us of the "passing of the goose" in many rural sections of this country. It is almost impossible to get a good fat Christmas goose in this locality. It seems the big cities take the best products of Rhode Island and a few other sections and those outside the pale of metropolitan markets must put up with what they can get in the goose line. Well fattened young geese are always dependable articles of food, but the goose of doubtful age may be a joy to look upon but a rubber tired spectre to carve.

Why farmers neglect the goose is not clear. The price of the meat is always high and it can be produced in quantity in a very short period and at a comparatively low cost. The success attending the efforts of goose culturists in Rhode Island should stimulate poultry farmers in other sections to emulate such a good example.

Columbia Park Poultry Yards For Sale.

The property contains a ten-room dwelling house, 53 feet in length, together with lot, situated within the limits of the city of Johnstown, and is offered for sale. The building is in good condition, having a floored attic and a partitioned cellar, the full size of the house, and every sleeping room is provided with a clothes closet. The lot is well supplied with fruit trees and berry bushes, as well as grapes, and has a splendid spring of water. There is a barn upon the premises, having a capacity large enough to stable several horses and a cow; there is also a carriage house in connection. There are six chicken coops, each provided with a suitable yard, well shaded, also upon the premises, and should the purchaser desire to enlarge the plant it can easily be done, as there are nine vacant lots adjoining the property, all of which are within the city limits and within two minutes' walk of the Cayadutta Electric Railroad. Editor American Fancier: Unless all indications fail, the seventh annual exhibition of the Western Poultry Fanciers' Association, to be held Jan. 13-18, 1902, will be the largest exhibition of poultry, pigeons, hares and pet stock held in the Mid-West. The association has paid out upwards of $10,000 in premiums and has always been noted for its promptness, the care given exhibits and the fair start and no favors granted to exhibitors, the liberality of its prizes, its method of cooping and handling large shows. This year will be no exception, as all efforts are being made to eclipse all former efforts. Remember the dates. All desiring catalogues or information should address

The Philadelphia Show.

Editor American Fancier: Your readers may want to know what the Keystone Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association's secretary is doing, now that the show season is fast coming on. Let me assure them that, like old Santa Claus, he will have a great many handsome prizes for the boys to compete for around exposition time.

A large amount of money has been secured and set aside for cash specials in all departments. The offerings this year will be much larger than last season, which in a measure were the banner specials of the year.

Mr. T. Farrer Rackham will again have absolute charge as general superintendent.

POULTRY DEPARTMENT.

The following clubs will meet in Philadelphia: Black Minorca Club, National Wyandotte Club, Silver Wyandotte Club, American Plymouth Rock Club, Brown Leghorn Club, Eastern White Wyandotte Club, National Pouter Association. There will also be special meetings of the American Waterfowl Club and White Rock Club. All these clubs will offer handsome specials, and added to the Keystone Association's specials, will make a most attractive list for which the boys are to compete.

The judges in poultry as secured to date are as follows: C. F. A. Smith, T. F. McGrew, Chester E. Howell, H. S. Ball, J. F. Crangle, D. J. Lambert, A. A. Parker, Geo. H. Northup, A. C. Smith, Geo. O Brown. The known ability of these gentlemen and their popularity speaks for itself.

The Black Minorca Club's secretary wishes me to say that they will offer over $230 for cash specials. This does not include the Keystone Association's specials, and should draw out the largest entry of Black Minorcas ever seen at any show.

PIGEON DEPARTMENT.

This department will have the attention of Mr. Robt F. Whitmer; a more thorough gentlemanly fancier could not have been secured.

The entry fee has been reduced and placed at $1.00. The great National Pouter Club will meet with us, and special cash prizes will be offered. There are already several hundred dollars on the Pouters.

Any other pigeon clubs not having made other arrangements are cordially invited to hold their annual meeting in Philadelphia and to offer their specials.

Already over 600 pigeons have been guaranteed, and the outlook is that Philadelphia will hereafter be known as one of the great pigeon shows in the country. The pigeons will have equally as good a location as the poultry in the great Auditorium hall, which has 90,000 square feet of space, and all parts of this enormous hall are lighted from overhead.

The judges selected to date are: Wm. J. Stanton, W. Kennedy, Thos. Scholes, D. E. Newell, A. B. Hoskins, C. E. Twombly, John Speller.

CAT DEPARTMENT

This department will be cared for by T. Farrer Rackham, assisted by a special committee of Philadelphia, who expect to make this department surpass any cat show ever given. Handsome specials have been donated. As the interest in cats in Philadelphia is so great, out of town parties are requested to send their names, addresses, and the likely number of cats they will exhibit to the secretary at an early date, as the number of cats has been limited, for want of proper caging facilities, to 300.

The judges will be T. Farrer Rackham and a judge yet to be recommended by the Philadelphia committee.

PET STOCK DEPARTMENT.

The plans for Belgian Hares and other pets will be announced later, as soon as the leading Belgian Hare people have been communicated with and their choice of judge decided upon.

INCUBATOR, BROODER AND SUPPLY PEOPLE.

The association has set aside in the Auditorium hall the absolute centre in the heart of the building, 10,800 square feet of space, and already 8,000 square feet have been taken, which shows the interest of the supply people and their appreciation of the space allotted them, such desirable space never before having been given to the supply people by any association. So great has been this interest that I am happy to be able to announce that the home industries will not be the only competitors for the popular favor, as a German firm will be with us and make a very handsome exhibit. This should naturally interest all would-be exhibitors who have not yet made up their mind to do so at once and communicate with the secretary before it is too late, for the association intends to make the supply department one of the greatest attractions of the show.

NOVELTIES.

The secretary will be glad to hear from anyone having novelties of any kind and desiring to make a display of them. JAS. CHESTON, JR., Sec'y.

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 20, 1901.

Springfield, Ill.

Editor American Fancier: The Springfield, Ill., Fanciers' Association will hold its annual show December 9th to 14th, 1901, and it will be the largest in the state outside of Chicago. The best judges are furnished to judge the poultry, pigeons and Belgian Hares. Our premium list will be the largest ever turned out in all the surrounding states and will be ready to mail by November 15th, so every reader may have one for the asking. Our secretary, J. A. Niesen, has left us and gone to Kentucky, so address all correspondence to LOUIS M. GIETL, Cor. Sec'y.

Springfield, Ill., Sept. 19, 1901.

Fanciers' Association of Indiana.

DATES CHANGED TO DECEMBER 4-11, 1901

At a meeting of the Fanciers' Association of Indiana held September 19th, the following officers were elected: President, Lora C. Hoss, Kokomo; first vice-president, C. J. Ward, Irvington; secretary, C. W. Hackleman, Indianapolis; treasurer, H. D. Lane, Indianapolis. The above named officers and the following members were placed on the executive committee: Edward B. Murphy, Carmel; D. B. Shideler, Indianapolis; F. R. Hale, Shelbyville; R. E. Jones, Flatrock, and J. W. Alvis, Indianapolis. At a meeting of the executive committee held September 20th, the following members were appointed vice-presidents; Harmon Bradshaw, Lebanon; Wesley Lanius, Greensburg; L. L. Moorman, Winchester and C. R. Milhous, Spencer.

Owing to the Association's inability to get the use of Tomlinson Hall for the dates previously claimed, it was decided to hold the show one week earlier, which will be December 4th to 11th, 1901, when it is expected that the largest exhibition ever given in the state will be held. Well-known and competent judges will be employed for all classes, and the score card system will be used for judging the poultry. Special attention is being given to the departments for dogs, cats, pigeons, Belgian hares, and all kinds of pet stock. The premium list will be ready at an early date, and a copy will be cheerfully sent to any one on request to the secretary.

A guarantee fund is being largely subscribed to by the members of the association, which insures that all premiums and other expenses will be promptly paid. Breeders should bear in mind that this will be one of the largest score card shows of the season, and if you do not win a place you have a card for your bird by a prominent judge, which alone is worth more than the entry fee.

Further information will be promptly furnished upon request to the secretary, C. W. Hackleman, 818 Majestic Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

Fowl Cholera.

Fowl cholera has long been known on the Continent of Europe as a dreaded scourge of the poultry yard. Historically it is of great interest, because it was one of the first diseases proved to be caused by bacteria and because Pasteur's researches in connection with it conducted him to a discovery which may be said to have formed the foundation of the method of protective inoculation by means of artificial cultures.

The organism which is the cause of the disease is called the bacterium or bacillus of fowl cholera, and it is so minute that it appears as a mere point, just visible to the eye, when it is magnified 500 times. To appreciate its exact form at least double that magnification is necessary. In a bird dead from fowl cholera the blood everywhere swarms with these bacteria, for it is mainly in that fluid that the germ multiplies when it gains access to the body. The bacteria, however, are not confined to the blood, for they are always present in great numbers in the intestines of diseased fowls.

As the name indicates, profuse diarrhœa is one of the most constant and prominent symptoms of the disease, and countless numbers of the bacteria are voided with the thin excrement passed by the affected birds. It is mainly or entirely by means of such excrement that the disease is spread, and in view of the circumstances in which fowls are generally kept, and their habits of feeding, it is not surprising that the disease often causes terrible ravages once it has obtained a footing in a poultry yard.

The disease is so common in certain parts of Ireland, and it occasions so much loss from year to year, that it is very remarkable to learn on the authority of Principal McFadyean, of the Royal Veterinary College in London, that English veterinary literature does not contain any authenticated case of the occurrence of fowl cholera in that country, and an eminent bacteriologist has even asserted that the disease does not occur in Great Britain. It is a mistake, however, to suppose that the disease does not exist in Great Britain, as Professor McFadyean tells us that since the foundation of the Research Laboratory at the Royal Veterinary College a considerable number of outbreaks of fowl cholera have been investigated there. During the past year two such outbreaks came under notice. The two outbreaks occurred almost simultaneously on two farms several miles apart, and it was not apparent that there had been any opportunity for the carriage of infection from one farm to the other. The only discoverable circumstance that could be held to have any possible bearing on the origin of the outbreaks was that at both farms the poultry were being fed with corn sweepings from foreign ships that discharged at a neighboring port.

In these two cases, as in all the others that have come under notice at the laboratory, it was suspected that the fowls were being poisoned, but microscopic examination of the blood left no room for doubt that the cause of death was fowl cholera. In each case the blood was found to be swarming with minute organisms having the size and shape of the bacteria of that disease, and artificial media inoculated with a trace of blood yielded cultures with the characters that belong to the germ of fowl cholera. Furthermore, experiments showed that these artificial cultures were capable of killing fowls within forty-eight hours after inoculation, the blood of such fowls swarming with the bacteria, just as in natural cases of the disease.

The discovery by Pasteur to which allusion has been made above was that artificial cultures of the fowl cholera bacterium may be successfully employed to vaccinate fowls against the natural disease. Inoculation with cultures that have only been grown for a few days has just the same effect as inoculation with a drop of blood from a bird dead of fowl cholera—that is to say, it sets up a fatal attack of the disease. On the other hand, if the incubation of the artificial culture is continued, with free exposure to the air, the bacteria gradually lose their virulence and become "attenuated," and such attenuated cultures may be employed to confer on fowls a valuable degree of immunity against the disease. Although the feasibility of this method is well established, it has never been put into practice on a large scale.

The chief symptoms of fowl cholera are great dullness, loss of appetite, separation from the rest of the poultry, livid discoloration of the comb, drooping of the wings, ruffling of the feathers, and diarrhœa. When such symptoms are exhibited by a number of fowls, or when a number of fowls die suddenly, even if these symptoms have not been noticed, it is well to suspect fowl cholera. As soon as the disease has been diagnosed, every ailing fowl ought to be destroyed and the survivors ought, if possible, to be removed to fresh premises while the old ones are thoroughly cleansed and disinfected.—Farmers' Gazette, Eng.

George W. Brown Enters the Judges' Ranks.

Editor American Fancier: I have been earnestly and urgently petitioned and solicited by many friends, poultrymen and associations throughout the south to announce myself as a judge of poultry, and while truly I have but little ambition in this direction, as I am very busily engaged and deeply interested in my own poultry matters which are assuming great proportions, besides have much other business, yet, after due thought and consideration, and realizing that the state of Arkansas should have and is greatly in need of a judge to meet the growing demands, have decided to comply with the requests and I now offer my services to all who may wish for same. Just here I wish to state as my friends have claimed for me, that I have had much experience and am fully acquainted with all the most popular Standard varieties, having bred and exhibited the majority of them for many years and have also had quite a little experience as a judge, giving entire satisfaction to all. G. W. BROWN.

Camden, Arkansas.

Following is the petition: To George W. Brown, proprietor Quachita Valley Poultry Farm, Camden, Arkansas. Dear Sir: We, the undersigned citizens and poultry fanciers of our respective localities, knowing your long experience in raising and handling over thirty varieties of fowls of the highest fancy order, your long and remarkable show record and experience in poultry shows in several states, also your character as a man, embracing the highest attributes of honor and fair dealing, also knowing you to be a man of the most excellent judgment relative to fancy fowls and pets, and in every way worthy of the highest confidence of the poultry craft—those fanciers who desire their stock fairly and impartially judged. In saying this we do not reflect on any poultry judge in the United States. We solicit you to announce yourself at once as fancy poultry judge that your services may be obtained throughout the south this season. We trust you will accede to our earnest solicitation, for we feel sure your own state will be proud of the compliment your announcement would bestow, and the whole south feel that one first-class judge of fancy fowls and pets were at her command. Very truly yours, Arkansas State Poultry Association, Little Rock, Arkansas; Texarkana Poultry Association, Texarkana, Ark; Ouacheta Valley Fair, Camden, Ark; W. H. Westbrook, president A. S. P. A., Pine Bluff, Ark; W. H. Croxsen, secretary A. S. P. A, Little Rock, Ark; C. M. Brown, Brown Incubator, Fort Worth, Texas; S. I. Water Fowl and Their Care.

To obtain the desired and best results with goslings, proper care must be exercised from the beginning. Having obtained breeding stock of good quality, the next thing wanted is eggs. The goose will usually select a location for her nest several days in advance of the first egg. In building the nest the interests are mutual with the gander as well as the goose, and woe to the small boy or man who dares to interfere with their home. The goose has no regular time of day to deposit her egg, and early spring she will in most cases lay only every other day. Geese are very particular and cover their eggs when leaving the nest. Visit the nests daily and gather the eggs, keeping them where they will not chill in the early spring.

Before this we have recommended chicken hens for hatching geese eggs. Prepare a nest where the hen can walk in without having to jump down on the eggs. Use four or six inches of soil in the bottom with sufficient litter to protect the eggs. Four or five eggs for a hen are the right number, according to size of the hen. Any good sitting hen will do the work. The twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh day, goslings will begin to break their prison walls. The goslings require no food until fully thirty-six hours old. A careful hen will brood the young same as chicks. We first give them milk from a spoon or small dish and add fine bread crumbs and later soft food made very thin with milk or water, giving the goslings a small grassy run from the first. Short green grass is nature's food for the goslings, and they commence to eat it from the very start. Change them often and do not compel them to eat soiled or dead grass. It will be remembered that geese are strictly vegetarians and the young will not thrive without green food in abundance. As soon as they will take grain, add that in small quantities to their daily bill of fare. Some of the finest goslings we ever produced were Brown Chinas, and we fed almost entirely on bread and milk until nearly two-thirds grown, however this method is entirely too expensive to be practiced. Goslings grow very rapidly from the start and will in many cases weigh 5 or 6 pounds each when 8 weeks old. At this age it is desirable to turn them over to the care of their legal parents—the old geese—who always stand ready to accept them, with open arms, no difference how many or what size or color. Continue their regular food daily, although they will only consume a small amount of grain if allowed the run of the pasture field or woodland range.

Goslings like ducks grow very rapidly and come to maturity far in advance of chickens. While it is not absolutely necessary that they should be provided with a large pond, it is advisable to keep water before them at all times. After the young are one-half grown, give them free access to the pond or stream.

Barring accidents, if the gosling survives until after four weeks old it will surely become a goose (or gander). Disease is almost unknown in this branch of the aquatic family, however the writer has known goslings to die with gapes the same as chickens, but only where the two run together on the same ground.

If the goose is allowed to sit and hatch, she will usually bring off a bunch of goslings, however in many cases they will tramp on the young, thus destroying them. This is especially true if a dozen or more old geese have a range together, for all are anxious to "father and mother" the young and a general war will be carried on constantly between the old males. The old geese will protect their young under any and all circumstances. When about four months old, the goslings will commence to moult their plumage. Many growers pick them at this timo, and again later in the fall. We would not advise picking except goslings are well cared for, as it somewhat retards their growth. In plucking geese for the feathers, it should be done at six to seven weeks apart, as feathers mature in this length of time. Old geese should not be plucked while laying or before the period, as it always checks egg production. Prime geese feathers especially the white ones, always command good prices for pillows and other purposes. Very few people, comparatively speaking, rest their weary heads on pillows made entirely of unadulterated geese feathers, for the reason that they are sooner or later mixed with hen feathers or "powdered" to add weight. This is usually done after they leave the producers' hands. I refer to this only in justice to producers of prime geese and duck feathers and to warn consumers who may purchase pillows from the retailers that are "warranted live geese feathers" and answer the same purpose and feel like a sack of hardwood saw-dust.—Charles McClave in the American Poultry Journal.

GETS IN TOUCH WITH FANCIERS.

Editor American Fancier: I enclose P. O. O. for a renewal of my ad. in your great American Fancier, which indeed is truly named, for I get in touch with fanciers who know a good show bird when they receive it, and I find ready customers in them through my ads. in your paper. I also avoid a lot who follow some newspaper influence who expect a show bird at $1.

The Minorca Controversy.

Editor American Fancier: I have waited long to see if certain breeders of the Black Green Sheen Minorca that have not as yet taken part in this controversy would express themselves in a way that would settle the matter for all time, but as Mr. Story is the only one that has had the courage of his convictions, despite the language of Mr. Maunder and Mr. C. Bright, I, as an honorable, respectful breeder, desire to help him out if I can. Some time ago Mr. Maunder wrote to the American Fancier saying that he had letters in his possession from several breeders who expressed their opinion as to who L. K. P. Y. was and using other language that bore down hard on my reputation, which for a time raised the temperature of my blood to a very high degree. But after I read his second article, wherein he said that he had studied hard during the four weeks he had laid in bed with rheumatism to learn the four verses of poetry that appeared in the American Fancier over L. K. P. Y. and could not learn them I laughed, my wrath subsided, and I said to myself, "Poor fellow, his physical being is deranged, and perhaps that affects him mentally." My ill feeling towards him turned to tender sympathy and I made up my mind that if I ever met him I would ask his pardon for feeling ugly towards him. Then a short time afterwards I read a piece of poetry from the pen of Mr. C. Bright, of Wearytown, calling upon all writers of poetry (except himself) to stop writing, as himself and Mr. Maunder were weary of it. To this I will say that Mr. C. Bright need not read anything but prose.

Then Mr. Maunder asked Mgr. L. K. P. Y. why the A. P. A. made some changes in the Standard in relation to certain varieties of fowls wearing the green sheen plumage. To this query, I can only say that I don't know. I stand in the same position now that I did some months ago and can see no reason for changing my mind.

Not long ago I read in the American Fancier an article written by Mr. Story, in which he said that he would be pleased to meet Mr. Maunder's birds (Black Minorcas) at Philadelphia, which I took to be a polite challenge, but as yet have not seen Mr. Maunder's acceptance. Again, in the American Fancier of August 31st Mr. Story repeats the challenge. Will Mr. Maunder dare to accept, or will he wait for the third?

Now, Mr. Editor, the Mgr. L. K. P. Y. wants to make Mr. Maunder the third proposition. If Mr. Maunder will exhibit at the next show at Johnstown five of his Black Minorcas, the produce of his matings from birds such as he advocates—low in leg, short in back, combs varying from five to eight serrations, with dead black plumage—against Mr. Story's birds in separate competition, the several judges of the show to pass upon the merits of both exhibits, and if Mr. Maunder's birds win over Mr. Story's birds I will make him a present of twenty-five dollars; if Mr. Story's birds win over Mr. Maunder's birds Mr. Maunder to make Mr. Story a present of the same amount. As a further inducement to Mr. Maunder to settle this dispute, I would like to meet him at Troy with his birds on the same conditions. Now, Fred, get off your perch and let us wind up this argument.

The Washington Show.

The details of the coming show of the Washington Poultry, Pigeon and Belgian Hare Association, which will be held November 19th to 23d at the Masonic Temple, corner 9th and F streets, are being rapidly worked out, and with each successive meeting the prospects grow brighter for the best show of pet stock ever held in the District of Columbia, and this is saying a good deal.

A special effort is being made to have an unusually large special premium list, and indications point favorably towards the accomplishment of this. There will be no hard restrictions placed on any of the specials which would make it difficult for an exhibitor to win. Every prize offered in the special list will be carried away by some lucky man. Unlike previous shows there will be no strings to any prize, no matter what its value may be, and after the judging there will be a clean sweep of all things.

The premium list will embrace fully 100 pages and perhaps more. It has just been turned over to the printer and a good piece of work in the typograhical line is assured. In the list there will be separate classifications for poultry, pigeons and Belgian hares, the special premiums in each class following the classification. The premium list will be bound in green colored paper, and it is expected that the advance copies will make their appearance about the forepart of next month. A number ot applications for the list have been received and more applications are coming in daily. All of these will be placed on file, and as soon as the list is issued a copy will be mailed to all applicants.

At a meeting held on Wednesday, September 11th, arrangements were made to send representatives to the Hagerstown Fair, which commences October 15th, the exhibits of which are recognized everywhere for their superior qualities, especially in the poultry line. Messrs. John M. Allen and Louis B. duFief, the corresponding and recording secretary respectively, were authorized to take in the trip and make whatever arrangements they deem necessary. Some good work is expected of them. Mr. Howard Payne, who was selected as judge for the Belgian hares, will be unable to fulfill his position. He has received a good offer at Kansas City, and within a week will make the trip to the west, not returning to the east until after the show, too late to judge. Correspondence is now being held relative to the securing of a new judge, the matter likely to be settled before October 11th so that there will be no delay from this cause.

The pigeon enthusiasts are running a close second to the poultrymen, and judging from present appearance nearly as many specials will be given to the pigeons as to other birds. This practically insures a good showing of pigeons, despite the fact that was at first contemplated only about one-half of the space will be allotted them as was given to poultry, that is, in the number of coops. The interest in the show seems to be increasing all around Maryland and Virginia, and a good showing is expected from both states. Even further out the interest so far created has been great and many letters have been received relative to the show, all of which are promptly attended to. Briefly summarized there is no doubt of the success of the Washington show.

Houdans.

The reasons why more Houdan fowls are not bred by poultrymen other than fanciers are several:

(a) Most persons do not know of their real worth.

(b) The fancier has not turned his show eye in the direction of the flecked beauty; and hence

(c) The fad is not prejudiced in Houdan favor.

(d) Folks say the Houdan crest prevents them from seeing hawks and other poultry enemies; and so on and so on.

It is an old breed. This is another reason many persons do not breed this bird, because many persons must have a thing that is new or odd in appearance or nothing.

The best evidence that the Houdan is an excellent breed is seen in the fact that those persons who have handled it for a number of years are slow to displace it for any other. They see it is highly meritorious and so keep it in preference to any other known breed.

There is one feature of the Houdan that very much mars its beauty unless it is bred right—the crest and beard. But this is comparatively easy of accomplishment, and then it is really a mark of beauty.

A few of the many points of true excellence it possesses are these:

(1) Quick to grow and feather as a chick, making broilers almost as soon as the Wyandotte, Rock or Brahma.

(2) Fertility of eggs, nearly every one producing a chick under favorable conditions.

(3) Early laying of pullets.

(4) Great productiveness of the females, hens 3 to 5 years old laying nearly as well as when they were young.

(5) Largeness of the egg and its pure white shell.

(6) Ease of confinement and perfect contentment in restricted yards.

(7) Almost perfect quality as a table fowl, both as to flavor of flesh and the very small percentage of waste in dress. The bones of the bird are very small, as are the entrails.

(8) Beauty of plumage, when desired, because it is one of the easiest breeds to produce in attractive feather.

(9) Longevity of the bird life.

(10) Excellence as mothers when now and then one wishes a brood. It is classed as a non-incubating fowl, but quite a good percentage of the elderly females are liable to set.

Are these qualifications not sufficient to entitle it to better recognition? Why do not more breed them? I have tried partially to answer the question, but in the face of the opposition those who adopt the Houdan as "one of the family" never more have cause to regret the adoption. Really there is not a better fowl in America nor any other country. —California Cultivator.

Birds That are Seen at Sea.

It is surely a matter for congratulation that the sentiment of mankind toward what we are pleased to call the lower animals is certainly, if slowly, tending in the direction of kinder and more merciful appreciation of them in nearly all their varieties as knowledge of them grows from more to more. As perhaps is but natural, says the London Spectator, this benevolent feeling is most strongly marked for birds, those feathered Zingaul of the air whose blithe evolutions above are more envied by man than any other power possessed by the vastly varied members of the animal kingdom. In obedience to the growing demand for more intimate knowledge of birds and their habits whole libraries have been written, and still this literature increases; but while in this there is nothing to cavil at, one cannot help feeling that the marvelous life of the sea birds has received far more adequate attention. Like so many other denizens of that vast and densely populated world of waters, their inaccessibility has hindered that close observation by trained naturalists necessary in order to describe them as they deserve, while as yet no marine Richard Jefferies or White or Selborne has arisen. And this want is really to be wondered at, seeing how fascinating is the study of oceanic fauna, and remembering what a wealth of leisure is enjoyed by masters of sailing ships, which alone afford opportunities for observing the life of the sea-people.

THE LORDLY ALBATROSS.

Easily first in point of interest, as well as size, comes the lordly albatross, whose home is far south of the line, and whose empire is that illimited area of turbulent waves which sweep resistless round the world. Compared with his power of vision, (sailors give all things except a ship the epicene gender "he") the piercing gaze of the eagle or condor becomes myoptic, unless, as indeed may be the case, he possesses other senses unknown to us by means of which he is made aware of passing events interesting to him at incredible distance from them. Out of the blue void he comes unhasting on motionless pinions, yet at such speed that, one moment a speck hardly discernable, turn your eyes away, and ere you can again look round he is gliding majestically overhead. Nothing in nature conveys to the mind so wonderful an idea of effortless velocity as does his calm appearance from vacancy. Like most of the true pelagic birds, he is a devourer of offal, the successful pursuit of fish being impossible to his majestic evolutions. His appetite is enormous, but his powers of abstinence are equally great, and often for days he goes without other nourishment than a drink of the bitter sea. At the Gargantuan banquet provided by the carcass of a dead whale, he will gorge himself until incapable of rising from the sea, yet still his angry scream may be heard as if protesting against his inability to find room for more provision against hungry days soon to follow. Despite his incomparable grace of flight when gliding through mid-air with his mighty wings outspread, when ashore or on deck he is clumsy and ill at ease. Even seated upon the sea his proportions appear somewhat ungainly, while his huge hooked beak seems too heavy to be upheld. on land he can hardly balance himself, and the broad silky web of his feet soon become lacerated. Thus his visits to the lone and generally inaccessible rocks which are his breeding places are as brief as may be, since even conjugal delights are dearly purchased with hunger and painful restraint. A true child of the air, land is hateful to him, and only on the wing does he appear to be really at home and restful.

OTHERS OF THE FAMILY.

The other members of the albatross family, who, with their chief (Diomeda Exulans), are all classed by whalers under the ugly name of "gooneys," bear few of the majestic characteristics of their great head. The "mallymoke," which comes nearest to the albatross in size and beauty, is actually found north of the line, a fact which severs this bird very widely from the albatross in geographical range. Also he is much livelier and more given to bustle fussily about. It costs him far less exertion to rise from the sea for flight than the unwieldy paddling run along the surface necessary to give sufficient impetus for rising the huge albatross, and consequently, his alightings are much more frequent. But he is undoubtedly a beautiful bird, suffering only by comparison with the most splendid of all sea fowl. A brown kind of albatross, with a dirty white beak, is very much in evidence south of twenty degrees south, dropping continually into the turbulence of a ship's wake, and diving to considerable depths after scraps. Sailors call them Cape hens, for some misty reason which is never given. Among southern birds they occupy much the same place in the esteem of those who are acquainted with them as does the sparrow at home. A general favorite among seamen is the Cape pigeon, a pretty, busy little sea bird, about the size of a dove, but plumper, with a black head and an elaborate pattern in black, gray and white upon its open wings. Around the stern of any passing ship large numbers of these fluttering visitors hover continually, their shrill cries and unwearying manœuvers contrasting pleasantly with the deep monotone made by the driving keel through the foaming sea. In common with most southern sea birds having hooked beaks, they are easily caught with hook and line, but will not live in captivity. Thoughtless passengers, wearied with what they call the tedium of the voyage, often amuse themselves by shooting these graceful wanderers, although what satisfaction may be found in reducing a beautiful living thing to a useless morsel of draggled carrion, is not easy to see. Occasionally a passing ship finds herself accompanied for a short time by large flocks of small dove-colored birds, which, however, do not seem to care much for the association with veseels so characteristic of sea birds generally. These are known as whale birds, probably because in the melee that goes on round the carcass of a dead whale they are never seen. Indeed, they would stand but little chance of a meal among the hordes of larger and more voracious feasters. Mention must also be made of a peculiar and unprepossessing member of the petrel family, which looks more like a disreputable albatross, but is somewhat scarce. Known indifferently among whalemen as the "Nelly," or the "stinker," it seems probable that this bird is the southern representative of the arctic fulmar, which is abundant in the north. His chief peculiarity is his forwardness. No sooner does a whale give up the ghost than the Nelly boldly alights upon the black island-like mass and calmly commences to peck away at the firm blubber, while thousands upon thousands of other birds wait impatiently around, not daring to do likewise. Hence the terrible threat current in whale-ships' "I'll 'light on ye like a stinker on a carcass."

MOTHER CAREY'S CHICKENS.

At the bottom of the size scale, but in point of affectionate interest, second to none, comes the stormy petrel, or Mother Carey's chicken, a darling wee wanderer, common to both hemispheres, and beloved by all sailors. With its delicate glossy black and brown plumage just flecked with white on the open wings, and its long, slender legs reaching out first on one side and then on the other, as if to feel the sea, it nestles under the very curl of the most mighty billows or skims the sides of their reverberating green abysses content as does the lark over the lush meadow. Howiing hurricane or searching snow blasts pass unheeded over that velvety black head. The brave bright eve dims not, nor does the cheery little note falter, even if the tiny traveler must needs cuddle up close under the lee of some big ship for an occasional crumb. Only once have we known an individual cruel or senseless enough to harm a stormy petrel, and then the execrations of his shipmates fairly scared him into repentance. They seem to have solved the secret of perpetual motion, and often at night a careful listener may hear their low cry, even if he be not keen-sighted enough to see them flit beneath him.

NEAR THE SHORES.

But apart from these true oceanic nomads are the large class of sea birds who, while gathering their food exclusively from the sea, never go to any great distance from land. This difference between them and the birds before mentioned is so strongly marked that, unobservant as sailors are generally, there are few who do not recognize the vicinity of land upon catching sight of a man o-war bird, booby, gannet or bo'sun. All these birds, whose trivial designations seem somehow more appropriate than the nine jointed nomenclature of the schools, frequent for preference more accessible shores than the craggy pinnacles generally chosen by the bolder outfliers. Of the first-named, the "man-o-war" or "frigate" bird, very little can be said to his credit. Michelet has rhapsodised about him in a curious effusion, of which one can only say he seems to have confused three distinct birds under one head. Were this bird to receive an entirely appropriate title, it would be "pirate" or "buccaneer," since it is only upon the rarest occasions that he condescends to fish for himself, choosing rather to rob humbler birds of their well-earned prey. No sea bird mounts so high as he, rising into the clear blue until only a black speck to the unassisted eye. Usually, however, he contents himself with a circling poise at an altitude of about 200 feet, whence he keeps steadfast watch upon all that transpires beneath. With his long tail dividing and closing like the halves of a pair of shears, and the brilliant scarlet pouch at his neck occasionally inflated, he waits, waits, until some fussy booby, like an overladen housewife hurrying home from market, comes flapping along toward her nest. Then the broad pinions suddenly close, and down like lightning comes the marauder. With a wild shriek of terror booby disgorges her fish, but ere it reaches the water, out flash the black wings again, and with a grand sweep the assailant has passed beneath his frightened victim, caught the plunder and soared skyward. In like manner these birds may sometimes be seen to catch a flying-fish on the wing, a truly marvelous feat. It is, nevertheless, a pathetic sight to see them, when old age or sickness overtakes them, sitting in lonely dignity among the rocks where they breed, helplessly awaiting, with glazing eyes and drooping plumage, the tardy coming of deliverance.

PIGEONS.

Pigeon Hints.

Although we have had several changes during the past month, the weather, on the whole, has been fairly favorable to the stock, and more especially has this been the case with the growing and developing young ones. In their case the growth has been steady and continuous, there has been little disease experienced, many have quite got through the moult and have made their first appearance in the show pen to the gratification of their owners. The only exceptions to this good result that have come to my notice have been among the very young squabs where, in some cases, the growth has not been so rapid as might be desired. This, no doubt, has been owing to two causes, the presence of cold winds, and the consequent fall of temperature during the night, and weakness on the part of the stock birds, who have not looked after their progeny so well as they would have done had they been in better health and condition; With the former, too, it may be that they have not received the usual amount of care and attention at the hands of their owners, who have been away from home on holiday thoughts intent, and those left in charge have either not had the knowledge or inclination to do what was necessary to meet the sudden change in temperature. In such cases it has happened that doors and windows, which have been opened wide during the heat of the day, have not been closed at night time and the young ones have become chilled. This may have been further helped if the nesting material has not been renewed when necessary, or a good lining of warm material placed in the bowl, to help in keeping in the heat of the body. No doubt, in the heat of the summer a little sawdust in the nest will be quite sufficient, but in the cold and boisterous nights we have recently experienced, this has not been enough for the health and comfort of the half fledged squab, and the contact with the cold pan has quite chilled its occupants, and they have not shown the progress that would have been expected by the owner on his return home.

Where weakness and want of condition on the part of the old birds has been the cause of the slow growth of the young ones, the decline has been most noticeable and rapid, unless assistance has been given by means of hand-feeding, or a changing of the responsibility to another pair of feeders and the separation of the parents. Such weakness and want of condition of the stock birds can, in the majority of cases, be traced to the trying and arduous nature of the season just ending, and to this cause, too, may the several cases of disease among the breeding stock be partly attributed. Of these, the most serious have been caused by brain troubles, such as were spoken of last month, and while the extreme heat lasted others were brought to my notice, and even quite recently cases of megrims have cropped up, thus showing that the danger is not yet over. In all such attacks complete rest and quiet in a cool and darkened pen should have a good result if the patient is tolerably young, but where the sufferer is aged there is little chance of a successful issue, each attack being more violent, until death puts an end to its suffering, or it is mercifully put out of its misery by its owner. Bleeding will sometimes give relief, while a little cooling saline medicine will always act beneficially in cases of this kind. To prevent the bird injuring itself during a violent attack, the floor of the pen should be thickly covered with a bed of soft hay, and the food given should be of the smaller and easily digested kinds. All food or drink of a heating or stimulating character should be rigorously excluded from the diet, as these are certain to heat the blood and prevent the quiet and repose so necessary in attacks of this kind.

Separation of the Stock Birds.—Last month I spoke about the necessity of commencing this work, and advised the young fancier to endeavor to have it accomplished by the end of August, so that the birds might have a little rest before commencing that trying process, the moulting of the old coat and the growth of the new plumage. Many, no doubt, have already separated the sexes, and have since seen the wisdom of such a course of action in the better condition of their stock, and the activity they have begun to show in the casting of the old and the renewal of the new coat of feathers. In some cases, however, the desire for just one more nest to make up for former bad results has led the owner to continue breeding operations for a little time longer, with the result that the moulting of the breeding stock has been further delayed, and fresh anxiety has been added in the bringing up of another pair of youngsters in each case, if, indeed, the birds have been able to bring off the full number. To all such breeders I would say, get the work done as quickly as possible, even if the whole of the feeding has to be done by hand, although in the majority of cases this need not be necessary, as one of the old ones can be left with the young until they can manage to pick up for themselves. In deciding which of the parents shall be removed, there is some diversity of opinion, some preferring to take away the cock, leaving the hen to finish the feeding, while others are of opinion that the male bird is better able to do the work. As a rule, I look upon the latter as being the safer course to pursue, and unless the hen has previously shown great aptitude in feeding during the latter stage of that process, or the cock is getting aged, I should always advise his retention. It will generally be found that the hen is most active and does the greater part of the work when the squabs are very young, and that with the preparation for the new nest the willingness to do the feeding is much lessened, while in the last stage the male bird does nearly all the work. Again, the strain of breeding must fall much more heavily upon the hen, and therefore she is much more entitled to the rest than the cock. The best time for the separation must depend to some extent upon the hen, but in every case it must take place as soon as she shows signs of going to nest again, so that this further strain may be prevented. Free breeders may show signs of commencing to nest by the time the young ones are about a fortnight old, but with older and slower birds another week may elapse before it will be necessary to make the separation. After this has taken place, a careful watch should be given that the young ones are being properly fed, and should this be the case they should not be interfered with, for, no matter how willing one may be to help and however well it may be done by hand, it cannot be compared with the labor of the old one in charge. Where, however, there is a falling off in the supply, the work should be supplemented by hand feeding, but even here some little care should be taken as to when such help is to be given. The best plan is to let the bird do his share during the day, and to make up the deficiency at night; then by the morning the young will be hungry and will begin to remind the old bird of his duties. If, on the other hand, the young are hand-fed in the morning, and rather plentifully, they will sit contentedly in the nest, will not trouble the old one, and he will get careless in his turn, will cease to feed at all, and thus the whole of the work will fall upon the owner. The best grain for the work, and the one most easily given, is good sound maples, which should be soaked for some hours before being given to the young ones; and when all the feeding is being done by hand, a little suitable grit should be given with the grain to help in the work of digestion. Only enough grain should be in soak for one feeding, for if it is kept on hand for any length of time it will commence to germinate, and if given in this state it is most likely to bring about internal troubles, such as diarrhœa and inflammation.

With such young ones there is often much difficulty in getting them to commence feeding on their own account, but this can best be met by restricting the amount when it is found that they ought to look after themselves. As a further means of quickening their efforts, should this fail, a little starving should be resorted to, and a supply of the smaller grains kept before them in a good vessel. I have found it the best plan to take them out of the loft at this time, and to keep them in a roomy pen where they cannot be molested by the older birds, and, if a slightly older bird that can already peck up is kept with them, they will generally soon follow his example, and commence feeding on their own account. At this time it will also be necessary to think of separating the young stock, if indeed the work has not had to be done in some cases before; and, where the number of lofts or compartments is sufficient, the younger stock may still be kept apart from the old birds. Where, however, a couple of places only are in existence, one should be allotted to the old cocks and the more developed and distinguishable of the same sex among the young ones, while the young hens, the very young birds, and the doubtful ones should be placed with the adult hens. That the young birds should be separated has been proved over and over again, for if allowed to run together indiscriminate mating is sure to take place among the more precocious, with the result that the strain of laying is added at a time when they require all their strength in growth and development, while the produce of such immature mating cannot possibly be of any use. Many a promising young hen has been ruined by such treatment, and has either gone light and died, or has developed such weakness as to prevent its being of any use when the next breeding season came round.—W. Fellowes in the Feathered World, England.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 130th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

PET STOCK.

The Fancier vs. The Business Breeder.

There is a difference in the aim of the fancier and the business breeder of Belgian hares. The fancier aims for perfection in his animals as an end in itself, the business breeder aims for perfection as a means of adding to his profits. The fancier is happy in the production of a splendid animal, even if he can not sell it at all; the business breeder is happy in the production of such an animal only or chiefly because he can sell it for a large sum of money. The fancier's aim is the perfection of qualities, the business breeder's aim is the getting of dollars. One loves art for art's sake, the other loves art for money's sake. The one has the spirit of a true artist, the other has the spirit of the money getter. The fancier is akin to the poet, the artist, the sculptor, the business breeder is akin to the money lender and the shopman.

The difference between the spirit of the two is brought out clearly when hard times strike the fancy. The fancier continues to pursue breeding with unabated, unflagging interest; the business breeder throws up the pursuit because it does not pay. The fancier gets his profit in pleasure, the business breeder secures his pleasure in profits. In these respects the two are world-wide apart, though in time of prosperity it may be difficult to distinguish the one from the other.

There is a difference in the methods of the fancier and the business breeder. Though their work may seem similar and their matings identical, the one puts his heart into his work, while the other loves his hares no more than he would his cabbages if the cabbages paid as well. The fancier studies every change with care, studies each individual animal, and when he makes a mating he has in mind clearly the results that will spring from it. The business breeder devotes less thought and study to the individual specimen, learns by note the rules practised by others, and trusts to rules and to luck for the results. For a time both seem to succeed equally well, but in the long run real success rests with the fancier, for study, brains and love are superior to brawn, formal rules and luck.

There is a difference in the management of the two. The fancier does not count the cost. What is best for his hares they get. The business breeder, on the other hand, counts the cost, and what will be cheaper he supplies. Everything, food, labor and care are carefully estimated. The hares must pay or off with their heads is his rule.

The world needs both the fancier and the business breeder. The former is needed to perfect and improve the exhibition and breeding qualities; the latter to show how to make the hares a paying investment. The former furnishes the best material with which to work; the latter uses this material to supply the general public with what it needs. Neither is wholly superior to the other; both are necessary to meet the needs of the public. The fancier is the better breeder; the business breeder is the better manager.

The ideal breeder would be found if the level headed business management of the one could be united with the devoted, artistic spirit of the other. But these characteristics, if not necessarily antagonistic, are generally separated.

As our tendencies are, so we shall incline to the one or the other. If it be true, as it is in some sense true, that "all the world loves a lover," then the fancier will be loved by the world, but if it be also true, as in some degree it certainly is, that "nothing succeeds like success," then the public will applaud the business breeder. I may prefer love to applause, while another may prefer applause to love. I may choose to count myself in the ranks of the fancier, but my neighbor, looking to material things, may prefer to be reckoned among the business breeders. Love glorifies life and is desirable, but business success buys bread and clothes and other fine things. The average man prefers material to immaterial things and worships the possessor of material things. And he has some reason to do so, because he cannot share in the love bestowed upon the fancier, but he can borrow money and enjoy the bread and wine of the successful business breeder.

We must make our choice. Shall we be fanciers with plenty of esteem and but a small share of material blessings, or shall we be business breeders with less honor but more money and what money can buy? Put this blankly, I must still confess that my choice is to be reckoned a fancier, though I cannot criticise those who choose what they consider the better part. Though they may not be lovingly remembered for the improvements they have wrought in the stock under their care, they have had their reward in the possessions they have accumulated and enjoyed in this life. There are not a few who would rather be "a live dog than a dead lion," who prefer the comforts of this life to a posthumous fame. Comfort here seems to them better than glory hereafter—a good table superior to a great name—a fine home more desirable than words of praise which can find no entrance to dead ears. And then, too, they can easily retort that, while their comforts are sure, your fame is uncertain, a retort that is more truthful than courteous, for very few, indeed, find fame. And yet, and yet, the fancier, if he lacks some material things and fails to win fame, has a finer pleasure through life than they, for beauty is to him a ministering angel of delight, and the pursuit after perfection is a well spring of pleasure. Day by day, amid the developing perfections of his stock, he draws in pleasure as an infant draws in nourishment at the breast, and day by day his work is no longer work, for love for it transforms it into joy. And so his life is a round of delights, fresh every morning, new every evening. He need not think of the future or be ambitious for a great name, for the present is joy enough and life is bliss. On the whole, I believe the fancier, even if he receive fewer natural rewards, obtains greater pleasure than the business breeder, and that to prefer to be the former rather than the latter is a choice justified by facts and approved by wisdom.

at any first-class hotel or restaurant includes chicken in some form. It is a task for caterers to get nice plump poultry, especially during the early fall. Most flocks are well fed, but lice and mites are allowed free course in the coops and on the birds and this will prevent the hens from laying and the chickens from growing more than any other one thing in the business. This is where Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies come in.

A FALL FAIR is a good place to show the product of your skill at poultry raising. The competition is such that no lousy, skinny birds stand a ghost of a show in winning any of the best prizes. You can use Lambert's Death to Lice Powder on your birds while they are in the show coops, but to get most benefit from this remedy it should be used for weeks before showing.

THE REGULAR FARE of every well kept poultry yard includes all the necessities for growth, fattening and the production of eggs. You can feed everything under the sun, and house the flocks in gilt-edged palaces, and still you will need to treat them for lice or they will continually harbor vermin. Grain is now too high in price to feed a lot of lice. You can save the cost of many a box of Lambert's Death to Lice on your feed bills by using it often and liberally.

A FAIR OFFER: We put up four remedies for poultry vermin, to cover all the demands in this line. We sell in all sizes of package from 10c each upwards, and send samples postpaid for this price in everything but "Liquid" which is not mailable. We agree to return the money if not satisfactory in every way. We send a 64-page book by mail free to everyone sending their address. If you are in a hurry send 10c. at same time stating what kind of lice you desire to knock out and we will mail trial package. 73-84

OIL AND GOLD FILL A POOR PUGILIST'S POCKETS.

THE LITTLE WIFE WHO DID IT AIL IS DEAD.

"Billy" Manning, who played in hard luck three months ago, returns to New York a real millionaire.

Dead Wife's Investments in Desert "Fruit Growing" land in California now Full of Gushing Wells.

Grub-Stake to a Reporter-Prospector Make Him Half Owner in a Mine Yielding $20,000 Monthly.

Into the Fifth Avenue Hotel lobby last night walked "Billy" Manning, retired light weight pugilist and first boxing instructor of Champion James Jefferies.

He wore a big diamond in his scarf. A bundle of money in his waistcoat spoiled the set of his very correct frock coat. "I am making a tour of the world," said Manning, "and I am stopping at this hotel while some tailors are doing business for me."

Manning was in town three months ago. His abode then was the Eureka Hotel, in the Bowery. He wore at that time a summer serge suit, and the wintry winds found free passage through it.

When the first Mrs. Manning was alive ("Becky," her husband called her), she took care of the winnings and savings of her husband. She got an idea that "Arroyo seco" land was good to raise fruit on, and bought small tracts all around Los Angeles, California. "Arroyo seco" land is dry river bed, and nothing has been persuaded to grow on it.

While Manning was in the straits described last winter he got a letter from California, requesting him to go out there and meet some persons who wished to buy some of his land. A check for expenses was enclosed. He saw his lawyer first and was advised not to sell. Oil had been struck around his property, and every foot of his land was in the oil belt. He followed advice and one of his wells, a 1,000-barrel gusher, is giving him $800 a day profit. Manning became a millionaire.

There was more luck in store for Manning. Years ago he had "grub-staked" F. M. Mooers, who was a Brooklyn Eagle reporter twenty years ago. Mooers never found gold until a year ago in the Landsberg district of California. At last, when he was eating the last of his beans and drinking the last of the water which he had "packed" many miles, he said: "Before I quit I will go up that gulch for one more try." He found a nugget worth $1,000, and staked out claims which now include the Yellow Aster mine, paying $20,000 a month.

Because of his grub-stakes, Manning has become half owner in the Yellow Aster. Mooers is with Manning in the round-the-world trip. Paris, St Petersburg, Cairo, Bombay and the Philippines are in their route.

"I want to see the famine country in India," said Mooers. "I am somewhat of an expert in famine myself, and can sympathize."

"Automobiles and first cabins are on our programme," said Manning.

What man has done, man can do again. The above is simply one case in a thousand.

Richard Ellis, of Los Angeles, invested $100 in oil stock, and within one year sold out at a net profit of $31,620,000.

Mr. John L. Bunting invested $170, and is now rated a millionaire.

It is those who fear to back their own judgment who always remain poor. Opportunity is all a true man can ask. Never before or probably again will there be such grand opportunities as are offered today in the California Oil fields. Among the many you will not find a better or more honest proposition than that offered by the Northern Consolidated Oil & Mining Co., No. 2.

This Company is a dividend payer and ranks among the best in the State; owns and controls thousands of acres of oil land in the various districts of California and Texas, and already have a large number of producing wells. In order to rush development work

Messrs. Orr & Cooper, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Sirs:—Your Lice Killing outfit received in good order. Orr's Liquid Lice Killer does the business in great shape. It knocks out the lice in the first round. Please send me particulars as to an agency.

Yours truly,
J. FRANKLIN HILLER.

NO LICE SINCE USING IT.

Enders, Pa., Sept. 5th, 1901

Messrs. Orr & Cooper, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Sirs:—I received your Orr's Liquid Lice Killer on July 22. I sprayed the coops of my yonng chicks with it, and have not been able to find any lice on them since.

Yours very truly,
CHAS. E. HARPER.

USED IT WITH BEST RESULTS.

Gardner, Mass., Sept. 11th, 1901.

Messrs. Orr & Cooper, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Gentlemen:—Your Orr's Lice Killer came to hand promptly, and I have used it with the best of results. My houses had been leased, and I found them in very bad condition, but since giving them a dose of your Lice Killer I am more than pleased with the prospects. I hope you have an agency near, so it may be obtained at all times.

Yours Respectfully,
F. E. ATWOOD.

Millions of Dollars in Copper Ore Blocked Out and in Sight Ready for Shipment.

The above refers to the mines owned by A. B. Lewis and a few Eastern Capitalists, Situated in Beaver County, Utah. Experts state the Royal alone has over $10,000,000 blocked out. They are all well developed mines, having passed all experimental stages. There are 15 claims in the Royal Copper Mining and Smelting Company's property, aggregating about 420 acres, all of them have been surveyed and application for patents have been made.

OVER TWENTY-ONE PER CENT IN COPPER ORE.

Late shipments show over 21 per cent Copper, 6-8 oz. Silver, $3.90 Gold, 27.75 per cent Iron 15.4 per cent Silica, being almost self fluxing.

NEARLY 5,000 FEED OF DEVELOPMENT AND ABOUT ALL OF IT IN ORE

THE MANAGEMENT BELIEVE THEY HAVE A LARGER AND RICHER BODY OF ORE THAN ANY YET DEVELOPED IN THE UNITED STATES.

SATURDAY OCTOBER 12 1901

From the Editor's Perch.

The extra Pan-American Number of the American Fancier will be issued November 2. It will contain a full account of the birds and a list of the awards at the great poultry, pigeon and pet stock exhibition to be held at Buffalo, October 23 to 31. Advertisements for this number must reach us not later than October 28. The edition being a large one and space being limited, early applications for space will be in order.

The advertisement of the Cleveland, Ohio, show appears in this issue of the American Fancier. From what we can glean through our correspondents in the West, Cleveland will be a model exhibition, the management being entrusted to men of ability and character. Being really the first great winter show of the coming season, the entries should be very large.

We are indebted to Messrs. Jodrey & Gossard, Danvers, Mass., for a set of feathers plucked from a Silver Wyandotte pullet and cockerel that are splendid specimens of the clear open lacing so much desired but so rarely found.

Headquarters for poultrymen at Hagerstown, Md., will be at Hotel Hamilton next week. So ordered by Chief John L. Cost.

Mr. I. K. Felch and Mr. A. F. Hunter will be associated with Mr. Grant B. Curtis next season in "making" the Reliable Poultry Journal. In the language of F. B. Zimmer, "Who would have thunk it?" We congratulate the big three on their happy reunion.

The following letter from a prominent breeder of American Dominiques is very timely:

"I see in a recent issue of the American Fancier a request for suggestions in regard to alterations to be made in the Standard of Perfection. I want to suggest one in regard to weight of American Dominiques. I have made a specialty of them for several years and have improved them much in every way, but I do think it is for the interest of the breed and breeder to have the weight reduced one pound, as so few reach the present weight, and when one does it is not usually a very useful specimen. I think with the weight reduced so that nearly all that are shown in score card shows are not cut two or more points on weight, we will see as high figures as we do on any breed today, and with a club formed in their interest, I think this grand old breed would soon take a place in the front rank as a general purpose fowl." —C. N. P.

We agree with our correspondent, and wish to add that most of the American Dominiques seen at shows are nothing more than Rose Combed Plymouth Rocks. They lack the style and shape of the true Dominique. The latter comes very close to being a Hamburg in shape and should be bred to that standard as closely as possible. That means taking off at least a pound in weight. Grace and beef seldom go together.

Re the pigeon entries at the Pan-American Editor Twombly of the Pigeon News writes:

"The largest entry that has ever been sent to an American show has been recorded at the Pan-American Exposition. Early in the season 3000 was the number talked of but we had our doubts and have hardly hoped for that number; 2000 was our estimate and we have felt all along that it would take some hustling to get that number. We are pleased however to be able to state that the entry will go past the 2000 mark, and when it is considered that this is in single classes, no displays and no pairs, and that every bird represents 50c in entry money, it will be readily seen that this is the largest entry yet made at a pigeon show in this country. Aside from being the largest entry, there will be the largest number of exhibitors and this is just what we hoped for most of all. A show composed of birds from a few of the largest lofts would not be a representative show, but here we shall have exhibitors from all parts, north, east, south and west. It will be an American show, a National show, and every fancier who is so fortunate as to win a ribbon, be it blue, red or yellow, at the Pan-American Exposition will have something to feel proud of for the rest of his life. To those few fanciers who had birds that they could have shown and chose not to do so for various reasons, we can only say, we feel sorry that you will not be with us. When your friends come home with the honors and glowing stories of what they saw, there is where you will most regret it and think of what might have been."

We congratulate superintendent and editor Twombly on his grand success in filling the pigeon classes.

We also hope to report equally glowing reports from superintendent T. Farrer Rackham in the Pet Stock department. That the Pan-American will break all records in American poultry, pigeon and pet stock entries is now reasonably assured.

An effort is being made to unite all societies along the Mohawk Valley and combine with the Adirondack Poultry Club of this city for the purpose of holding a big show at Schenectady, N. Y., in February. A meeting will be called in the near future at Amsterdam, N. Y.

H. J. Quilhot has been elected president of the Adirondack Poultry Club in place of Frank Randall. Mr. Randall having retired from the fancy, deemed it best to resign his office and in selecting Mr. Quilhot to fill the place, the Club did a graceful act. The old Club will be "in the running" next season.

Cortland, N. Y., will have a show, December 10 to 14. "Billy" Greenman and Dr. Santee will be in charge, and a full house is expected.

Mr. Gardner Replies to Mr. Lamon.

Editor American Fancier: Have just read Mr. Lamon's remarkable letter in the American Fancier of October 5th. Mr. Lamon's egotism is only surpassed by his utter disregard for the facts in the case. When I wrote the letter published in a former issue, I had no idea that Mr. Lamon was responsible for the editorial referred to, but as Mr. L. seems determined to misrepresent the case and create a false impression in regard to his purchase of twenty Barred Rocks of me, I am compelled to give you a full statement of the facts.

Mr. Lamon, who has always professed great friendship for the writer, came to me last spring and wished to purchase two pens of good birds for a start in Barred Rock breeding. At the end of the breeding season I selected fourteen birds for Mr. Lamon. He was not present when I selected the birds, nor did he know one from another. The birds selected were as follows: Cockerel heading 3d pen at New York, 1901, and six dark females used by me as breeders last spring, all cockerel bred; a light pullet bred cock heading one of my pens last spring and six exhibition colored females as follows: Hen 1st at Boston, 1900, three years old; hen 1st at Johnstown, 1900, three years old; hen 2d at New York, 1901, two years old; hen in 3d pen at New York, 1901, and two others that had never won a prize at any show. These birds were sold to Mr. Lamon on certain conditions, which he has since seen fit to utterly disregard.

Later in the season I sold him six males, as follows: Cock 3d at New York, 1901; cock 4th at New York, 1901, and four others that never won a prize anywhere.

Mr. Lamon never owned either 1st New York cockerel or his dam, and knows it as well as anyone, nor has he any young stock from the mating that produced the 1st and 2d cockerels. He took some eggs last spring to raise for me on shares and has decided to keep four-fourths of them for his share, but not one of them came from the dam of 1st and 2d New York cockerels and he knows it.

Any time Mr. Lamon wishes me to do so, I stand ready to enter into the details of this transaction more fully.

M. S. GARDNER.

American Buff Leghorn Club

There will be a meeting of the American Buff Leghorn Club at the Pan-American poultry exhibition at Buffalo, N. Y., Friday, October 25, 1901, at 2 o'clock p. m. A large meeting is promised, and all persons interested in this popular fowl are requested to join the club and be present. The club offers a silver cup at the Pan-American, to be competed for by members only. Are you a member?

Editor American Fancier: My winnings on Buff Rocks at New York State Fair, Sept. 9th to 14th, 1901, were 2d on cock, 2d on hen, 2d on cockerel, 1st on pen of old, and 1st on pen of young. In your report of the above show, Sept. 21st, you gave James M. Sinnett credit for 1st pen of young, which should have been 2d. Will you kindly make mention of this in your next issue.

The Fanciers' Association of New Jersey.

Dear Sir: An important event in the history of the poultry and pet stock industry is the annual show where the best productions of fanciers are shown to the pleasure and profit of all. A visit to our next show will prove of interest and will fully justify your expectations. The Fanciers' Association of New Jersey was organized under the name of the Washington Feather Club at Washington, N. J., December 1st, 1896, and its name was changed at the annual meeting held in that city January 19th, 1899, to the Fanciers' Association of New Jersey. Since then the Association has annually held shows, each year being an improvement in increased entries and satisfactory results. The last show, being the fifth, was held at Orange, N. J., January 1st to 4th, 1901. This show was the largest poultry and pet stock display ever held in New Jersey, 827 entries and over 1000 specimens. At a meeting of the Association during this show, it was decided to hold the sixth annual show at Newark, N. J., on December 10th to 14th, 1901, being one of the first leading associations to announce the date for holding its next show, but a suitable hall not being procurable, a lease of the Armory at Orange, N. J., was concluded, and the sixth annual show of the Fanciers' Association of New Jersey will be held at Orange, N. J., December 10th to 14th, 1901.

Since holding the fifth annual show, the Fanciers' Association of New Jersey became incorporated under the laws of New Jersey. It is the intention of the Fanciers' Association to hold annual shows, selecting the different cities of the state each year. The coming show at Orange is being arranged for upon a scale in keeping with the magnitude of the poultry and pet stock interests of this state. It is anticipated that 1500 to 2000 specimens will be entered for competition. A large fund is subscribed to defray all expenses, also a big list of cash and other specials as premiums. The best obtainable judges and management, prompt payment of awards and fair dealing is promised. Premium list will be mailed on application. T. Farrer Rackham is superintendent

Judges: Poultry, J. H. Drevenstedt, D. A. Nichols, J. C. Haynes, P. H. Scudder, T. F. Rackham, H. Y. Yelton, Geo. H. Northup, M. Davenport; Pigeons, John Glasgow, J. Behrmann, H. V. Crawford; Pet Stock, J. Robbins.

Show at Torrington, Conn.

The Torrington, Conn., show dates this year are November 27 to 30, and the exhibition will be held, as last year, in the spacious and well lighted Union Theatre, in the heart of the town. All the fanciers who sent birds to Torrington last year were well pleased with the treatment they received, and the association has been in receipt of many appreciative letters, coupled with announcements of intention to "come again." This year there will be an entry fee of 50 cents and coops will be furnished. D. A. Nichols and D. J. Lambert will do the judging. A feature will be the special handsome association ribbons offered for best colored, best shaped birds, etc., in many varieties. The management believes, and seemingly not without reason, that the Torrington show this year will be a record breaker and one of the best to be held in New England during the season.

H. W. BUNK.

Germantown, N. Y., Oct. 7, 1901.

Black Minorca Judge At Philadelphia.

Editor American Fancier: In your paper of August 31st issue page 9, I noticed an article from Rowland Story headed "The Minorca in Prose and Poetry." The article could not well have escaped my notice because several have written me to call my attention to it and to ask me to reply to it, among which number was one man who voted for Mr. Story. I have no objection to Mr. Story writing prose or poetry about Minorcas if he wishes to, in fact there are times when I like to read a little of either. Perhaps I can express my sentiments regarding his poetical efforts, in rhyme, I will not call mine poetry:

Oh! If you have a fever and have to lie in bed,
Just read R. Story's poetry to ease your aching head.
'Tis also good for billiousness, dyspepsia, cramps and gout.
One verse is quite an overdose for constitution "stout."
The critics should not ask so much in rhetoric and rhyme
When Story makes grand thoughts obscure in language so sublime.
Nor should he pause in doubt to scan absurdities in meter,
For thus has Mr. Story made his verses more "unique-er."

But I do take exception to that part of his article which pertains to me personally and reads as follows:

"The Club was asked to vote for three names for judge of Minorcas at our annual meeting at Philadelphia. I had the honor to be chosen and I take this occasion to thank my friends in the Club for this courtesy and confidence shown me. The management of the Keystone Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association of Philadelphia, has seen fit to choose one of the others to place the awards, who, no doubt, knows a good Minorca and can place them properly, but he being a seller of show birds and having the interest of his own strain to promote, I am waiting anxiously to see if he will arise to the occasion. I am in no ways doubtful and do not wish it to be so understood in any manner. All I ask, and it is my right to demand it, viz., an honest and just impartiality, with none of the natural human tendencies of self."

Now Mr. Story's version of the above, while he mentions no names, is misleading and insinuates discredit to me, as I was the judge appointed, therefore I desire space to enlighten your readers regarding the matter. The Minorca Club was asked to present the names of three competent Minorca judges to the officers of the Keystone Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association for their consideration. In response to this, the Club's secretary, Charles L. Blanton, sent cards to the Club members requesting postal votes for judge of the Minorca class at Philadelphia. Sixty-one members voted for seven different men as their preference. Of these votes I received 27; F. B. Zimmer, 23; Rowland Story, 7. A list of the votes was sent to the Philadelphia association by the secretary of the Black Minorca Club, whereupon James Cheston, Jr., secretary of the association wrote me that I had received the largest number of Club votes for judge of the Minorca class and asked my terms for doing the work. I replied immediately giving terms and soon received official notice of my appointment. Mr. Story's report as quoted makes it appear that he alone was chosen by the Club, but that the Philadelphia association saw fit to appoint another. Under the circumstances I think the fitness of my appointment can easily be seen when one vote more would have made four for me to every one cast for Mr. Story and Mr. Zimmer could have thrown away two votes and still have had three to Mr. Story's one. The four other votes were given to as many candidates.

Now as to Story's insinuations regarding me, he states that there is no doubt but that I know a good Minorca and can place them properly in contrast, he admits, earlier in his article under consideration, that he "may have erred in judgment in selecting specimens of his own to exhibit" but that he was "pleased to state, no party but himself suffered by that selection." Evidently the Black Minorca Club desire a judge who is capable of accurate judgment, as inaccuracy in judging the class at Philadelphia would be absolutely certain to result in "suffering" for many others beside Mr. Story. Mr. Story also says that I being a seller of show birds, have interests of my own to promote. Are we to understand that he, not being guilty (?) of selling birds which can win, has no interests of his own to promote? Now ever since I was appointed to judge Minorcas at Philadelphia I have refused to sell any birds for that show, and I have since then received inquiries from seven of my regular customers for Minorcas to show at Philadelphia, some wanting one or two birds and others full strings and I have refused each one emphatically on the ground that I am determined to judge that class without knowing the ownership of any bird in it. Every bird in the Minorca class at Philadelphia will stand on its own merits and be judged according to the Standard of Perfection. Mr. Story or anyone else has no reason to think I would favor birds of my own selling when in the show room in the capacity of judge, for I have in the past avoided selling any birds to be exhibited in a class which I expected to judge in any show. Of this I can furnish proof to anyone who is skeptical.

I notice by the October number of the Feather that about three fourths of the members of the Minorca Club have promised an exhibit at Philadelphia. This means a great Minorca exhibit and a most advantageous advertisement for the breed. I am very respectfully,

GEORGE H. NORTHUP.

Buff Plymouth Rock Club Catalogue.

"Way Down East," where nearly all the American varieties have originated, in the later eighties R. C. Buffinton, of Fall River, Mass., and Dr. Aldrich, of the same place, started with the intention of trying to produce a fowl of the then, is now, and as it probably will be, Plymouth Rock shape, with a surface color, and we feel safe in adding the most popular plumage color of any domestic fowl that has ever been. That color is Buff.

Unquestionably neither of these gentlemen had the least thought that their efforts would be so well appreciated, and it is probably as surprising to them as to others the way the Buff Plymouth Rock has worked its way to the front rank as a popular variety and one which is deserving of the patronage of poultrymen, whether they are fanciers only or they who are wanting the variety which is adapted to the utility side as well.

In the Buff Plymouth Rock of today we find a much different fowl than at the time they were first offered to the public, also than at the time they were admitted to the Standard in 1893. At that time shape and size varied greatly, some being of a short, chunky, compact type, which were about 1½ under weight, while others were long, gaunt and drawn out and were nearly as much overweight. Today this is vastly different; of the Plymouth Rock type we find the greater majority and up to the weight the Standard calls for. This insures quick growth, as it is a recognized fact that no variety or breed of fowls will average as great an equal weight at a given age, whether it be the broiler, roaster or matured fowl, as will the Plymouth Rock.

The Buff variety have always been pointed to as wonderful egg producers, especially in the winter. This, added to the great demand for show specimens, places them as a variety that should be considered by those who intend starting with poultry.

The Buff Rock Club catalogue contains many interesting and valuable articles relating to them, and will be sent to any address by the secretary of the club, W. C. Denny, Rochester, N. Y.

Poultry Studies at the Rhode Island College.

Editor American Fancier: I enclose a circular giving a brief outline of the course in poultry keeping to be given at the Rhode Island College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, Kingston, Rhode Island, during the coming winter, to which I would kindly call your attention. This course is designed to give instruction in the arts and sciences underlying successful poultry keeping; also the latest and best in practice and management as given by the most successful specialists in the various lines of work. The students are thus enabled to gain a large amount of practical knowledge as well as theory, for they come in direct personal contact with such men as I. K. Felch and many others ranking high in the poultry world.

We shall aim to make the coming course more practical and helpful than ever before, if possible, and hope to be some small help in advancing the interests of the great industry of poultry raising. J. A. TILLINGHAST.

Kingston, R. I., Sept. 26th, 1901.

The circular reads as follows:

COURSE IN POULTRY-KEEPING

Six Weeks, January 8 to February 19, 1902.

The course embraces work in the following subjects:

Zoology, anatomy, physiology and embryology, sufficient for a foundation for the course.

Fowls, origin, kinds and breeds, principles of breeding, mating, care and management.

Special breeding of water-fowl, turkeys, etc.

Incubation and brooding, natural and artificial (actual practice).

Foods, chemistry of feeding.

Egg and flesh production.

Caponizing, fattening, killing, dressing and marketing.

Diseases, prevention and cure.

Poultry-plants, location, drainage, buildings, planning and drawing plans, specifications, estimates and construction.

Ventilation and heating.

Records and accounts.

Bees as a side issue with poultry.

Crops raised in conjunction with, also for, poultry.

Excursions will be made to various poultry-plants for observation and study of plans and practical management. No pains will be spared to render all possible return to the student for the time and effort spent in the course.

Application for enrollment should be made at once, as the number must necessarily be limited. Address J. A. Tillinghast, Kingston, R. I.

Nothing Like the Buff Leghorn.

In this day and age of rush and bustle only the fittest can survive, be it man, beast or fowl, so we may be assured that each and every popular fowl bred to any extent today has some merit, but it is my aim at this time to call your special attention to the Buff Leghorn as we find them today in the yards of some of the best breeders, all buff, no white or black. They are very pretty to look at certainly, and their beauty is more than on the surface. To prove this I will give you a little of my experience in testing their worth with two of the most popular varieties of today. Four years ago I procured a sitting of Buff Wyandotte eggs from a prominent strain, raised three pullets and one cockerel, which I kept, giving them as good care as my knowledge of their wants would allow. They matured much slower than our Leghorns, were six weeks later in beginning to lay, laid smaller eggs, and about one half as many. I kept them two seasons to be certain they couldn't keep up with my Leghorns, then cut their heads off and had a good chicken pie. But wishing to test their merit farther, I last fall purchased three Buff Plymouth Rock hens (Hamm's strain), gave them the same care through last winter that our Leghorns had, but the results were much in favor of our Leghorns, the Rocks laying only a few eggs up to February 15, while our Leghorns of the same age were laying nearly every day most of the winter, but a good share of my satisfaction has come this season in raising a few Buff Rocks in with my Leghorns. April 16 we had our first chicks hatch, sixteen in number; fourteen were Leghorns, two Rocks. They all had as good care as we could give them; the Rocks proved to be a pair and have grown well. The Leghorns outgrew the Rocks up to broiler size, one and one-half to two pounds, reaching the desired size seven to ten days first, but now, September 1, the Rocks are ahead. The cockerel weighs 5 lbs. 5 oz., against 4½ lbs. for the Leghorn cockerels the same age, while the Rock pullet weighed 3½ lbs. and the Leghorn 3 lbs. 1 oz. The food consumed by the Leghorns is considerable less than that eaten by the Rocks, and at no time has there been more breast meat on the Rocks.

From my eight years' experience with the Buffs and the experimenting I had done in that time, I am thoroughly satisfied there is no better all around fowl raised today than the Buff Leghorn for either farmer or fancier. They grow fast, mature quick, lay plenty of long white eggs, and are very hardy and strong when chicks. They certainly are all right, and if you, kind reader, never have owned a flock of Buff Leghorns, get one, and get it now, for now is the time to buy, when the breeders' yards are full. You can get bargains.

Mr. Colt Invites Americans to Show in England.

Editor American Fancier: No doubt ere now you have read Mr. Thornton's letter published in some eighteen American poultry papers and the offer of Robert A. Colt, Limited, to care for the birds while in England. It would seem to me that it is a grand chance and one that should be taken advantage of, not only from a business but a financial standpoint. You can sell many and perhaps all, if you wish; also put your name and stock more prominently than heretofore before the people of Europe, and at the same time be able to advertise in the American papers the fact that you have been one of the (I trust many) fanciers to bring about the success in part of a grand international show. If possible, also to cement the feeling of friendship now existing between the fanciers of the two countries.

There is no doubt that if you send here this year a large number of birds from the United Kingdom and Ireland will be on hand at New York and Boston shows in 1902. If a few of you would take the matter up and get others interested, I am sure the American spirit of success will prevail.

Any information that I can give you I will be pleased to do. You may rest assured that my services are at your command. We would like to have at least 200 birds. ROBERT A. COLT.

Show at Amesbury, Mass.

Editor American Fancier: The eighth annual exhibition of the Amesbury Poultry and Pet Stock Association will be held at Armory hall, Amesbury, Mass., December 4 to 6, 1901, and the managers are sparing neither labor or money to make it the best ever held in the history of the association. Armory hall is one of the best in the state for a poultry show, being on the first floor, well lighted, heated, and easy of access. Mr. I. K. Felch will judge the show and the decimal score card will be used in placing the awards.

The premium list is now under preparation and anyone wishing advertising space or anyone who would be so kind as to donate some special prize should correspond with the secretary, and we assure you that your donation of specials, whether large or small, will be greatly appreciated. $14.00 in cash is offered in regular prizes on each and every standard variety of poultry, besides the largest and best list of specials, including silver cups, one of which is sterling silver, gold lined, valued at $40. It stands on a black ebony plynth and is 8¾ inches in height, and is offered to the exhibitor showing the largest number of birds scoring 90 or more points.

The Belgian Hares, cats and pigeons will have special classification and will be liberally provided for.

We shall use ribbons for all regular prizes instead of cards, and a ribbon of merit will be awarded to all specimens not receiving either first, second or third prize which scores 90 or more for fowls and 92 or more for chicks. This is done to protect the large number of choice birds in some of the larger classes which are left unplaced after the regular prizes have been awarded. While a third prize often goes to a bird scoring much less than 90, it will be seen at a glance that each and every one of these ribbons represents a bird that is eligible to win first prize in the absence of competition.

Our premium list will be ready about November 10 and will be mailed to all who apply for it.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY PAPER

WM. S. MARTIN, JR.
White Creek, N. Y., Oct. 4, 1901.

Allentown, Pa.

The great Allentown fair for years has had a reputation, and therefore we were not surprised but rather expected to meet just such hustling, up-to-the-present officers as we found from president down to the superintendents of the different departments. Secretary Schall, a very busy official, but always courteous and obliging, handed us our credentials and headed us toward poultry building No. 1, where we found a fine display of the best birds, taken as a whole, and the best cooped and classified exhibit we have seen yet this fall, consequently the easiest and most satisfactory exhibit to judge. Allentown has the buildings (two large and well arranged houses), they have good coops, an up-to-date poultry superintendent, a good lot of general officers throughout, and only one thing could we suggest that we think would be an improvement and please all the breeders would be that birds be shown or judged singly instead of in pairs. Let each bird stand on its own individual merits and then a first-class cock or cockerel would not be dragged down to defeat by having a poor mate and a fairly good all round pair win. As the most of the larger fair associations have adopted this plan, we do not for a moment think but that Allentown will fall in line in the near future.

Of the birds it may be said nearly all the standard varieties were represented. In Plymouth Rocks there were some fine birds, particularly in Barred. Wyandotte classes well filled. The Whites a strong class and some corking good chicks shown. Some that were not placed were grand in shape, but at present plumage composed of an over-abundance of green or miniature feathers, which gave them a yellowish tinge. A little later on things might be changed. Buffs a nice class and some good birds in color and shape. Javas small classes. Some good American Dominiques. Leghorn classes well filled. In Browns we noticed three grand females, and there were two fine cockerels shown, barring the comb of one and smutty hackle of the other; both had grand saddles, were good size, and nice shape. Whites were a large entry and some of them strictly A No. 1. Not a great many Minorcas, but some fairly good birds. Polish entries in the different classes small, but nearly all varieties represented, and many of them good ones. Bantams were well represented, both in Ornamental and Game. Some first-class Sebrights, both Gold and Silver, and some really grand Cochins. Game Bantams out in force. Black Reds and Duckwings brought out some quite good ones, particularly in females. In large Games nearly all varieties were shown, but only small entries of each variety; they were a lot of good birds. The best pair of Blacks we ever saw was here, with true exhibition qualities, high station, close, hard plumage, long, clean necks and heads, and short wings and small tail, something very uncommon for that color.

In building No. 2 were cooped the ducks, geese, turkeys, hares and pet stock. Entries not large, but in geese the quality was grand—four pairs each of grand Embdens and Toulouse, one pair of the latter the best seen in years. Some of the ducks were good, the Pekins particularly so.

The pigeon display at this fair was a show of itself. There were hundreds of them, and they were judged by Mr. Koons. On our way to Allentown we spent an evening at Wilkesbarre with Messrs. James M. Wilcox and Arthur Trethaway and visited the home of Mr. T. and took a look at some of his Minorcas. I'll whisper it to you, but "don't give it away." He's got 'em and don't you forget it. Nuff sed. "ZIM."

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 180th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children; and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

Cage Bird Classes.

Editor American Fancier: Seeing your report of Toronto, Canada, show, I noticed that there were cage bird classes. I would have sent some entries myself if I had known that they had classes for my pets.

I have sent to lots of show secretaries, but have not been lucky enough to find but two shows (New York and Boston) that have classes. Now, if any secretary or show committee that have classes for cage birds should see this letter, I hope they will send me along a premium list.

W. R. BOSTOCK.

Auburn St., Saugus, Mass.

Hanover, Pa.

The poultry exhibit at the Hanover fair was very large compared with previous years and was without doubt one of the prime attractions. The largest exhibit was made by H. A. Shettler of Carlisle, Pa. The quality of birds shown was the best ever exhibited. The classification of the birds was good in most instances, except owing to lack of coops, most of the Bantams were shown in the exhibitors' coops. Bantams were simply immense. We can only say that there were some wonderful specimens in Black Cochins, Sebrights, etc. The stock had the best of care and was well cooped. Selling and trading of poultry was quite numerous. J. H. Mehring of Littlestown, Pa., won most all the prizes on pigeons. The poultry was judged by G. O. Brown of Baltimore, Md. Superintendent, Lewis Swartzbaugh, Hanover.

Following are the names of those who were awarded prizes: Rudolph Thiele, Washington, D. C.; W. K. Birely & Co., Frederick, Md.; H. A. Shettler, Carlisle, Pa.; J. H. Hahn and J. H. Mehring, Littlestown, Pa.; A. L. Gardner, Washington, D. C.; John Little, Penn township; Edgar Flickinger, Vernon Baughman, Hanover Poultry Yards, Sharon E. Smith, Joshua Holliday, Spangler Bros., Wm. Overbaugh, Jr., Charles Shirk, Herbert Trone, Charles Trone, Wm. Wise, W. D. Kinsell, Frank Fate, Hanover, Pa.

Following are the Carlisle, Pa.

The poultry show at the Carlisle Fair, September 24th to 27th, passed off very nicely, a credit to its managers, and one, if not the one, of the chief attractions of the fair. The entries footed up to about a thousand, which filled the house and made a grand display. The exhibitors were principally from the town, some of which have been seen and represented at our earlier fall shows and others who will be heard from later. We noticed among the number a neighbor breeder from near the "deestrict" of Washington, whom I was told had made his first purchase in Belgian hares. We are not quite sure if he examined the male before buying—probably Rudolph can answer? Our friend Egulf believes in showing small Bantams, which I noticed from the coop must be first-class layers. The birds, as a whole were fine, some grand pens being shown.

Barred P. Rocks, all good birds, notably first hen, cockerel and pullet. One hen not placed, grand in barring and color, but not in show condition.

Buff P. Rocks, 1st and 2d hens ahead of all; yet some good birds were shown in the pens.

White P. Rocks, 1st cock a good one; 2d not as good in shape. Chicks a fair lot, although 1st cockerel and pullet ahead of all.

Wyandottes, a good class all the way through, yet the 1st cockerel and 1st pullet in Goldens showed remarkably good lacing.

Langshans, fair, but chicks most too long in back yet good in color.

In Cochins we met some grand birds, Partridges especially. I believe some were winners at Hagerstown in 1900. The first pen would do honor to New York or Boston, as I know they've met with success at Hagerstown. In Buffs, 1st cock a grand bird but out of condition to show his true value. Young birds too young to show.

Brahmas, all good, the 2d cock (Light) while out of feather, would make his 1st rival hustle to hold his own when in condition.

Leghorns, about the average save the first Brown cockerel, a peer to them all, fine in hackle and saddle. Buffs as a whole a little ahead of the other classes.

Minorcas, a good lot of birds. Whites not quite as large in numbers.

Polish, all varieties represented and some grand birds shown, some of which will be seen at the great Hagerstown fair.

Houdans, the strongest lot shown here for years, notably the winners in the old class.

Red Caps, while not many yet quality good, notably first cock, hen, cockerel and pullet.

Hamburgs, some grand birds with a few Madison Square winners in the lot, others well up.

Games, all varieties shown, the Black Reds ahead of all as to quality, 1st cock, hen and pullet simply grand. A nice line of Indians shown, the Whites ahead as to quality.

Silkies would do justice to any of our larger shows.

Game Bantams well represented, some grand birds being shown in Black Reds and Red Piles, and also in Brown Red chicks.

In Variety Bantams we found some exceptionally good birds. In Golden Sebrights 1st cock, hen, cockerel, pullet and pen. In Silvers, 1st hen a beauty. Some grand Japs were shown, and we noted a very pretty pair in 1st cockerel and pullet of Grays, Whites, Blacks and Black Tailed, being away up in quality. Cochin Bantams a good lot, the 1st Black pullet being a little clinker. Booted White and Rose Combs, all nice, clean birds.

Ducks, geese and turkeys were well represented with some good birds in the lot.

Pigeons made a good showing as did also the exhibit of rabbits.

Following are the Correction.

Editor American Fancier: In your report of prizes at Poughkeepsie poultry show, you say, "R. I. Reds, all to Irish," and then go on and give my winnings as on Peacomb R. I. Reds. They were on R. C. R. I. Reds, and in point of fact there was not a Peacomb R. I. Red there. I also won 2d on pen White Wyandotte chicks (my only entry) and your report gives it to another party. Irish may have won all on S. C. R. I. Reds, but I certainly won the lion's share on the R. C. variety.

PIGEONS.

The Manhattan Homing Pigeon Club.

A speedy and grand race with Homing pigeons was flown by this association of veteran pigeon racing fanciers on Monday, September 30th, from Charlottesville, Va., distance air line 300 miles and completing the race schedule for young pigeons bred in 1901, from 100, 150, 200 and 300 miles. The entry was 108 birds from 15 lofts and the start was made by Mr. J. M. Murphy, Adams Express agent, at Charlottesville at 6 a. m., with weather conditions clear and wind light from the south. Throughout Pennsylvania, New Jersey and at home district, the flying conditions were unusually severe for young birds, the wind being fresh from the north and northwest and the record established by the leading lofts was one the Manhattan Club members can well be proud of. The following is the result of the race in complete detail:

Name.	Distance.	Time in Loft. P. M.	Aye'g yds per min.
Albert Schimmel	306.07	1:58:43	1125 26
John R. Camp	305.27	1:57:42	1124.71
Peter Schardinq	305.22	1:59:30	1120.30
L. W. Spangehl	304.25	1:59:30	1120.30
Geo. Mortimer	309.26	2:10:35	1109.05
John Fischer	304.39	2:04:15	1106.30
T. Fred Goldman	309.04	2:12:20	1104 76
Harry Robertson	302.04	2:02:56	1100.75
Theo. Hurlebusch	301.97	3:06:33	1092.31
C. W. Shackford	305.65	2:12:35	1092.08
John Cadoo	305 51	2.20:27	1074.43
John Kohlbrenner	303.82	2:28:58	1050.60
F. A. Spangehl	302.60	3:21:02	949.27
B. McL. Quackenbush	307.65	3:36:32	939.18

This race completes a very successful season of this old established pigeon racing club, and the winner of the present fly, Mr. Albert Schimmel of Flushing Avenue, Brooklyn, is the proud possessor of the Sterling silver loving cup, emblematic of the Club's young birds championship for 1901. The cup was designed and donated to the Club by Mr. Arthur Brown, an enthusiastic pigeon fancier and member of the Manhattan Pigeon Flying Club, and is of Sterlling silver supported by three handles of natural buck horn and is a superb trophy. Mr. Brown, the designer, is a son of Mr. J. G. Brown the vice-president of the National Academy of Design and president of the American Water Color Society, and the cup is without question evidence of artistic ability and Mr. Arthur Brown a "chip of the old block."

The Homing pigeon sport is becoming a very popular one with our New York and Brooklyn citizens and can boast to-day of very many preminent business and professional men in its ranks. We are somewhat behind England and the European cities in this fascinating hobby, but can proudly claim some of the best flying records that have ever been established so far as speed and distance is concerned, and the prospects of further grand work by the Manhattan Pigeon Racing Club during 1902.

A BILL OF FARE

at any first-class hotel or restaurant includes chicken in some form. It is a task for caterers to get nice plump poultry, especially during the early fall. Most flocks are well fed, but lice and mites are allowed free course in the coops and on the birds and this will prevent the hens from laying and the chickens from growing more than any other one thing in the business, This is where Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies come in.

A FALL FAIR is a good place to show the product of your skill at poultry raising. The competition is such that no lousy, skinny birds stand a ghost of a show in winning any of the best prizes. You can use Lambert's Death to Lice Powder on your birds while they are in the show coops, but to get most benefit from this remedy it should be used for weeks before showing.

THE REGULAR FARE of every well kept poultry yard includes all the necessities for growth, fattening and the production of eggs. You can feed everything under the sun, and house the flocks in gilt-edged palaces, and still you will need to treat them for lice or they will continually harbor vermin. Grain is now too high in price to feed a lot of lice. You can save the cost of many a box of Lambert's Death to Lice on your feed bills by using it often and liberally.

A FAIR OFFER: We put up four remedies for poultry vermin to cover all the demands in this line. We sell in all sizes of package from 10c each upwards, and send samples postpaid for this price in everything but "Liquid" which is not mailable. We agree to return the money if not satisfactory in every way. We send a 64-page book by mail free to everyone sending their address. If you are in a hurry send 10c. at same time stating what kind of lice you desire to knock out and we will mail trial package. 73-34

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordin ary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

Nothing Under the Sun Will Make Hens Lay

And keep them in healthy condition all the year round Like BANNER EGG FOOD AND TONIC.

It starts the pullets laying, and will keep them at it all through the winter, when eggs are very scarce.

We are having our SIXTH ANNUAL SALE during NOVEMBER and have some special inducements to offer those who have never tried it, as well as old customers, who know a good thing when they see it.

During this sale we will sell a 1 lb box for 15c; or 7 1 lb boxes for $1. The regular price is, 1 lb box 25c; or 5 1 lb boxes, $1, so it will be to your advantage to order this at the reduced price. In addition to the reduction in price, we will give with each order for 7 1 lb boxes, one of KUHN'S EGG RECORD AND ACCOUNT BOOKS, which retail at 25c. each, or to those who order $2 worth, or 14 1 lb boxes, we will give a book, which every poultryman needs, entitled "LITTLE CHICKS," which retails for 50c. each. It contains special articles by M. K. BOYER, P. H. JACOBS, G. W. NONES, W. W. KULP, A. G. DUSTON, A. F. COOPER, M. V. NORYS, and other well known poultrymen. The information it contains is worth $100 00 to any breeder.

Remember these special prices and offers are for the month of NOVEMBER ONLY and no orders will be filled after NOVEMBER 30TH, at the above reduced prices.

Send your orders in at once, and we will fill orders as soon as received.

N. B.—If sent by mail, add 20c. for each box for postage, but the 7 boxes are cheaper by express, purchaser paying all charges.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

The Torrington, Conn. Show.

The premium lists for the Torrington show are now ready and will be mailed to any address on request to Charles E. Young, Secretary, Torrington, Conn. The Ass'n announces that its regular premiums have been increased and offers a larger list of specials than ever. This will be the first show in Connecticut this year and indications point to its also being among the three or four of the best in New England this season. D. J. Lambert and D. A. Nichols will place the ribbons. A feature of the show will be the State meeting of the American Buff Plymouth Rock Club, which will be held Friday, Nov. 29. The Club cup is up for competition among members, and Torrington promises to be something of a "buff" show, not only of Rocks but of all the other Buff varieties. Entries close Nov. 19th.

Butler Co. Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association.

Editor American Fancier: The Butler County Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association is making great preparations for the third annual show, which takes place at Hamilton, Ohio, Dec. 12 to 16, 1901. The catalogue will be a 40-page book. All parties wishing to make entries at this show should send in their names to the secretary, C. W. Rudolph. Fanciers will find this to be one of the best towns to show in in the West. Parties having good stock can always find a good market for same in this section. The members of this association are good business men and premiums are always paid, so that fanciers are sure of their premium money. Our judges are of the best. The class of stock shown at former shows was as good as could be found.

THE PAN-AMERICAN.

THE LARGEST SHOW OF BIRDS EVER SEEN IN AMERICA.---GREAT ATTENDANCE OF FANCIERS.

The Pan-American Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Show is over. It proved to be the largest function of its kind ever held in America. In round numbers there were 4000 chickens, ducks, turkeys, geese and ornamental fowl, 2000 pigeons and 500 head of pet stock. These figures are based on catalogue entries and actual count. The success in all the different departments is due to the efforts of the superintendents, Messrs. Burgott, Twombly and Rackham. Considering the severe handicaps imposed on George H. Burgott, his success in pulling off a big and successful show under adverse circumstances was remarkable. So well did the fanciers of the United States and Canada appreciate his work, that they presented him with a gold watch, chain and locket. The presentation was an impressive affair, Mr. H. V. Crawford of New York City making the opening speech in well chosen words, followed by Mr. William McNeil of Canada in a genuine fancier's speech. Mr. Burgott was so deeply affected that Mr. Harrington of Buffalo fittingly responded for him in words that will live in the memories of fanciers for years to come.

The buildings selected for the exhibits were the cattle sheds, and more unsuitable buildings could not have been found. Poor light, full of draughts and dampness are not calculated to help the fowls, judges and exhibitors. But good temper prevailed. We never saw such a crowd of good natured fanciers gathered at one show. And the way some pitched in and helped out was a rare treat. As Mr. Burgott stated: "If it had not been for R. E. Jones, "Jack" Saunders, Harry Lamon and "Barney" Mosher, I do not know how I could have got things agoing as smoothly as I did." He was right. But W. E. Richmond deserves much credit for his unselfish work in helping out in the office. He was "high low jack and the game" at all times.

Below we give numerous reports written by experts on the different breeds. Space is somewhat limited, consequently we cannot go into detail as much as we would like, but a fair idea of the magnitude of the show will be obtained by reading these reports.

There were numerous meetings of different clubs, reports of which will appear in a later issue. The American Poultry Association held a special meeting in the New York State building, Friday evening, October 25th, the real importance of the meeting being the resignation of Mr. H. A. Bridge as secretary of the society. Mr. Bridge has been in poor health for nearly a year past and being unable to attend to the business of the association, tendered his resignation. Mr. T. E. Orr of Pittsburgh, Pa., was elected in his place. The business before the meeting we thought was to be of general or executive character, but it seems that reports to be made at the annual meeting were permitted to be made at the special, which we consider out of place if not illegal. Quite a number new members were voted in.

The judging in most of the classes was promptly done and completed the second day of the show, but in other classes it dragged altogether too much. There were enough judges to finish the show in one day.

PAN ROASTS.

Big show.

Everybody was there

And some who ought to have been staid at home.

It was a tough job for George Burgott, but he got there.

Harry Lamon was a "star" in Burgott's office. He treated the "boys" without fear or favor in a gentlemanly manner.

Then there was "Jonesy," the faithful "left-tenent" and general all round man of Burgott's. The next new star in the heavens will be named "Jones."

"Jack" Saunders, the sturdy Canadian was another staunch friend of Burgott's. His work eloquently represented the great big fancier's heart he has. Good boy Jack.

"Barney" Mosher was another faithful helper and while his time was cut short he did Yeoman service and helped the good cause along.

Spratts cooped the show and did it well. But a little more consideration for the "exigencies of the occasion" would not have hurt some of their employes.

The big lot of judges were engaged and some were told to stay at home because entries in their classes did not fill. Better to have had them all there.

The greatest regret was that Dr. S. T. Lea, the only southern judge on the list, could not be present. "Ben" Myers took his classes in Black Langshans and "filled the bill."

Mr. Justus Frederickus Crangle and Mr. Marcellus Envangeline Werts are great Barred Rock experts, but when they tried to do the exposition grounds the first day, they went through the barred gates to see "what was on the other side." It cost them a dollar to get in again.

John L. Cost, the Pooh-Ba of the big Hagerstown show was a "star" attraction at the Pan. John got along all right till he accused some one of swiping his suspenders. After a long search they were found hanging down John's capacious back.

Judges Zimmer and Quilhot went to Niagara Falls on Sunday and from there to Canada. They bought some Indian relics and hid them in their socks to escape the U. S. Custom House officers. As there was no duty on such goods, it was "love's labor lost."

When "Barney" Mosher saw the electric tower, he exclaimed: "Torment my hide, it reminds me of a Christmas tree, only it's so different."

"Old Comrade" D. F. Taylor, of De-Ruyter, N. Y., was on deck all the time. He has sold all of his famous White Rocks and White Wyandottes to Knapp Bros.

We had the pleasure of traveling Buffaloward with the "Sage of Natick," I. K. Felch. The latter has the Belgian Hare fever and no mistake. He writes his letters with a "rufus red" pencil now.

Harry Lamon made another great hit with his first prize Buff Leghorn cockerel. This is the best bird of his breed or kind we have yet seen,—a revelation in color, fine in style, with great head points. He is in a class by himself.

Secretary H. V. Crawford and Treasurer, Capt. C. M. Griffing of the New York Poultry Association were in evidence all week and made many friends, and incidentally received the assurance that many new entries for the New York show would be recorded.

Adam Thompson has been engaged to judge Indian Games at New York; a most excellent choice.

Indian Game exhibit was the best in years and the honors well divided. Bicknell & Whiting did well but Kirby and Eadie Bros. pressed them hard enough to make their victory all the more decisive.

The Buff Wyandottes were the finest lot ever shown in America and the first hen is a sweepstake winner in any buff class of any variety. She is a golden buff all over.

And such Silver Wyandottes! As big a crank as we are on Silvers, we have never seen such an array of finely laced pullets as here. And we are glad of it, because a noted Plymouth Rock breeder remarked to us: "There is nothing handsomer in the chicken line than a finely bred and laced Silver Wyandotte hen or pullet."

But we were disappointed in the Golden Wyandottes. They were few in numbers and, while the old birds were really fine in quality, the young stock was far from what it should have been. We missed some of those fine Canadian birds of Magill and Wray Bros., albeit Ira C. Keller had a goodly lot.

Mr. Wooden of Battle Creek, Michigan is not only a Buff Wyandotte crank, but a forcible and excellent speaker as well. His speeches in the American Poultry Association meeting were models of eloquence and logic.

The White Wyandottes were great classes and Roycroft Farms got a good share of the prizes. The second prize White Wyandotte cockerel barring his eye, was the best bird of his kind we have seen at any early show in years. He was white as the driven snow, blocky in type, symmetrical and excellent in head points. The winner of first, while fine in plumage and comb, was too straigh in back and carried a tail that was not according to "Hoyle."

The only regret we have to record is that the bird that won first for the most typical female in the class failed to qualify to the accepted standard. The bird on her left, unplaced, filled the bill and was purchased by "Ed." Knapp, one of the shrewdest and best breeders of Whiie Wyandottes in America.

Frank McKenzie did some good work in the Houdan alley. He is a good judge of the breed, a good fancier and a gentleman.

"Frank" Bean made a big record in the Buff Rock alley, but that must be expected for he is a judge of Buff birds second to none.

Millville Poultry Farm made a big record, and that is only natural when we consider the fact that Mr. Delano has the handling of the exhibits. He is a past master in the art of showing birds.

Big Theodore Hewes stated that the pencilling on the Silver Pencilled Wyandottes beat anything ever seen on a Dark Brahma in the world. The world is big, Theodore, and hot air is cheap.

Smith's Souvenir Pan-American Leg Bands are O. K. Every winning bird had one attached, i. e., where the judges were inclined to accept Mr. Smith's generous offer to place them. It was a big expense to the donor, but greatly appreciated by the exhibitors.

Mr. T. E. Orr is the new secretary of the American Poultry Association. A wise selection. Mr. Orr is a gentleman and fancier and full of executive ability. He is the right man in the right place.

The Buff Rocks were really great at the Pan. There was quality to burn. We never had the pleasure of meeting Frank Wetzel but he is a "buff breeder" of the finest grade. He knows the color.

Mr. C. J. Ross, the New York representative of Commercial Poultry is no longer connected with that live paper. Mr. Comyngs takes his place. We congratulate Mr. Comyngs and trust he will prosper as well as he deserves. He is a gentleman and a fancier.

It was pretty cold in Buffalo and some judges in consequence had tender feelings for the poor birds. Several of the latter were awarded prizes because they had grown whiskers on their legs and toes.

C. T. Cornman, Carlisle, Pa., bought all of A. E. Blunck's and B. C. Thornton's Bantams at Hagerstown, and "Charley" was dickering for some fine birds at the Pan. This reminds us of the fact that Judge Cornman made a successful debut as a judge of Game Bantams at the Pan.

A fancier is a fancier always. He can take his medicine. We heard two opinions expressed at the Pan, one was: "The judging was rotten." The other was: "The judge turned down my bird, which many considered was the best one of his kind in America, but as the judge made only one or two mistakes in a great lot of classes, he is entitled to much praise for his work." Which is the fancier of the two critics? The answer is obvious.

The pigeon display was a fine one, but as the birds flew the coop Saturday night and all evidence of a pigeon show had disappeared by Sunday, we are unable to give the awards in this week's issue.

W. A. Smith of Whitney's Point, N. Y., is acting as T. Farrer Rackham's assistant in cooping shows for Spratts.

Eugene Sites, Elyria, Ohio, is a first-class fancier, who evidently values the fancy at a just price. Breeding the best of stock, he believes in paying and getting good prices. We want a few more such.

F. L. Mattison, for the first time in four years, showed some of his famous Silver Wyandottes. His record at the Pan is eloquent evidence of the fact that he has not lost his grip in breeding these laced beauties.

We must admit, and with pleasure, that the Silver Wyandotte pullets at the Pan were the finest lot of birds of this breed we ever handled, and it's nearly eighteen years ago that we started breeding and handling them.

THE BIRDS.

PLYMOUTH ROCKS.

Barred.—Cocks, 19. First, in fair plumage, a medium colored bird, shape good, barring not as straight as second placed bird, but wins on condition and comb; 2d, good comb, even in color, well barred, good bay eye, loses to first on condition, undeveloped tail; our choice for first place is 3d, being better in breast color than 1st, good shape, hackle too light, but well barred. Hens, 27. First, medium light in color, good shape, well barred to skin, good comb and bay eye, wins on under-color and strength of bar; 2d, same type of hen, not clean cut in surface, good comb, good bay eye, off in back shape; 3d, darker in color, but showing quality, loses to second on condition. Cockerels, 27. First wins on sharpness of bar, being barred well down to the skin, good wing, very straight in barring, not as bright and clear in surface as we would like to see, but the choice of the class, being a good all around bird; 2d, Wyandotte in shape, coarser in barring than first bird, lighter in shade of color, but quite clear and distinct in under-color, a close second; 3d, loses to second on color, not a sharp barred bird; the 8th prize bird should have been placed nearer the front, the brightest, sharpest and cleanest cut bird in the class, best of shape, cannot see why he should not have been in the money. Pullets, 57. First, medium in color, shows good under barring, good wing, but not a clean cut bird, surface not as bright or sharp barred as 2d pullet, very good in shape, tail somewhat pinched; 2d, the best colored bird of the two except wing, shows too much white, not quite as good in beak and eye color, a very close second; 3d, too open in barring, lacking strength of bar, several pullets not placed better in every way. Pens, 11, 1st, contains four pullets matched in color of plumage, eyes, beaks and legs, male matching in shade of color with females, all good shape, a crack pen for time of year; 2d, females more on open order of barring, in barring somewhat broken, male must have carried them through to second place; 3d, very even in color, cockerel heading this pen better in comb than 4th pen cockerel, which won pen their position.

Buff.—Cocks, 20. First, even in surface, good shade of color, sound in wing and tail, good under-color, good comb, good bay eye, wins on his merits, well placed; 2d, loses to first on shape and color, not as clean in wing or as even in surface; 3d, the best colored bird in class, but not in prime condition; many other fine birds in class, 4th, 5th, 7th and 8th all good ones. Hens, 27. First, clean surface, free from foreign color, wins easy; 2d, not even in surface, shows some black in tail and wing, not in good feather, a small specimen; 3d, a better hen altogether; a strong class of hens and many good ones not placed. Cockerels, 31. First, well matured, good sound color, shape, comb, and good bay eye, well placed; 2d, very even in surface, bad in shape of tail, color of same not as good as many unplaced birds; 3d, the best one of the lot in color, but lacks age. Pullets, 31. Many good ones could not be placed on account of age. First wins on surface color, not clear in tail color, well placed on account of age; 2d, better in some sections, but not having merit enough to win out; 3d, a good one, close up to 1st and 2d; some unplaced birds would have looked well in the front ranks. Pens, 8. First, an easy winner, best one handled so far this season, females all good shape, even in color, good combs, good eyes, cockerel at head of pen large, good shape, well matured, hard pen to head off; 2d, close up in quality, not as well matured, when matured will be a hard pen to down, only lose on condition; 3d, pullets not even in color, cockerel in this pen a good one.

White.—Cocks, 20. First, a very white bird, good comb, shallow in breast, shows quality; 2d, same style of bird, has same fault in shape as 1st, is white, good comb; 3d, a large fellow, good comb, good shape, in moult, a close second. Hens, 26. First, white, good legs, good eye, might be fuller in breast to her advantage; 2d, white in plumage, white legs, Wyandotte in shape; 3d, good color, poor shaped tail, good comb, not our choice for place. Cockerels, 22. First, grand in shape, good comb, an easy winner; 2d, good quality, out of condition, not furnished, looks ragged, not as white as many birds placed lower down; 3d, shallow in breast, high up on legs and back, not a typical specimen. Pullets, 21. First, a dream, fine in shape, very white, good comb, eye, beak and legs; 3d, our choice for second place, strong enough in shape to win over second, has more quality; many fine ones shown, in fact, the best lot of pullets ever seen together. Pens, 8. First contains four large, fine shaped hens, good combs and white in plumage, headed by a crack cock bird, a gem, good shape, white, good eye, pen well mated; 2d, headed by nice white cockerel, females good, outclassed by first; 3d, very close up.

WYANDOTTES.

White.—Cocks, 30. First, a nice finished bird in shape, pure white, good comb, better in Wyandotte shape than 2d and just as white, with better comb; 2d, pure white in plumage, too long in neck to be a typical Wyandotte, but a strong bird in any show, loses to 1st on shape and comb; 3d, loses on condition. Hens, 43. First, large, good comb, too long in back, but shows good width, taking her make up all over somewhat Cochin in type, loosely feathered, but caused by age; 2d, better type of Wyandotte, not in as good plumage as 1st, loses on condition; 3d, a very white hen, good comb, good full breast, too concave in back, a good one, and placed O. K. Cockerels, 33. First, blocky, good full breast, good comb, weak in shape of tail, pinched in saddle, but placed right; 2d, a large bird, poor eye, not as good in comb as 1st, a white bird, coarse in make up, seems out of condition, a good one; 3d, good comb, bay eye, good shaped back and tail, white, lacks in breast, up on legs, shows too much daylight under compared with 1st cockerel; 7th placed bird, fine comb, good bay eye, a crack, should have gone higher up, our choice for 2d. Pullets, 66. First, same type as 1st cockerel, good comb, white, good yellow legs; 2d, same make up, also 3d, all of them good, anyone of them could have taken first place and no dissatisfaction shown, to an outsider not handling them it would be hard to pick the best one, but all birds reveal some hidden quality when handled; awards well placed. Pens, 19. First contains four white hens, good Wyandotte shape, cockerel heading this pen a better one than 1st open cockerel, good comb, good bay eye, strong in shape, a little high in tail, pure white in plumage, well placed; 2d, a good one, containing four nice white females, good shape, good combs all of them, cockerel heading this pen white, good shape, good comb, good eye, not as well matured as cockerel in 1st pen; 3d, loses on shape of females, cockerel in this pen not as strong in shape as 2d pen cockerel; all pens shown were good and worthy of mention.

Silver.—Cocks, 7. First, a large fellow, good shape, back a little long, will improve when hackle is all in, good comb, strong in color of breast, wing, hackle and saddle, good under-color; 2d, not as large, a little off in surface color, shows straw color, good wing, fine hackle, good stripe in saddle, breast shows some frosting, good comb; 3d, not as good in wing, hock lacks lacing, not well laced in body and fluff. Hens, 7. First, good shape and color, in No. 1 condition; 2d, a good one, loses on condition; 3d, shows age, but a good one in shape and color. Cockerels, 10. First, a good silvery bird, good comb, clean cut in plumage; 2d, a larger bird, not as good in wing color, smutty in hackle, loses to 1st on color; 3d, good silvery bird, splashy in lower breast, plenty of frosting on fluff. Pullets the cream of the lot. First, a perfect beauty, open laced all over, clean black and white, good shape, good comb, one of the best ever shown; 2d, same kind, but loses to 1st on shape of back and color of tail; 3d, fine shape, lacks lacing in fluff; 5th, a wonder in color except hackle, where she is dark and smutty. Pens, 4. First contains four females well laced, good shape, headed by a nice silvery surfaced male, light in eye, grand in color of hackle, saddle and back, a beauty, good comb, good shape; 2d, another good pen, females about same type and color as those in 1st, but male lacks color enough to put them to the front; 3d, in this pen are four nice open laced pullets, but cockerel lacks age and shape.

Buffs.—Cocks, 6. First wins on shape and color; 2d, large, coarse in shape; 3d, grand in color. Hens, 4. First, grand in color, very good shape, good comb; 2d, not as even in surface color or as good shape; 3d, a good one, but loses to 2d on color. Cockerels, 1st, wins on color; 2d, not as even in surface; 3d, loses on shape. Pullets, 10. First wins on color; 2d, on shape, not as even in color; 3d, not matured; pullets all a good lot. Pens, 5 First, very even in color, cockerel rich golden in surface, females all same shade of color, good combs, good bay eyes; 2d, females good in color, not as good in shape as 1st pen pullets, cockerel good color, but off on shape; 3d, loses on shape, color good, a very good pen when matured.

Golden.—Pens, 2. First wins on size, shape and color, cock heading this pen a grand good one; 2d, females mossy, cock out of condition, not a bad pen, but outclassed.

Partridge.—Cocks, 10. First, large, good plumage, bad eye, very good in comb, shallow in breast; 2d, small bird, not in good condition, slim in body, narrow in back, outclassed by 3d in shape; 3d, a better bird in every section. Hens, 10. First, well pencilled in breast, weak in hackle, long in back; 2d, large, about same quality in color, Cochin type; 3d, weak in tail shape, better in color than 1st or 2d. Cockerels, 8. First not matured, off on shape; 2d, larger, better shape, not far behind in color, did not handle bird, but looked a better bird; 3d, close up; 4th, best colored bird in cockerel class, not matured. Pullets, 9. First and second a toss up for place; 3d, shafty in breast, good in hackle, weak in pencilling of back. Pens, 4. All good. Second pen our choice; 3d pen contains some fine females, male immature. Male in 1st pen off in shape and plumage, think a closer examination of this pen by the judge would have changed the awards.

Black.—Cock, 1st, wins on color; 2d, not as good in color, shows quality. Hens, 1st, large, good color, wins on condition; 2d, good in comb, not as good in color as 1st. Cockerel, 1st, grand in color; 2d, not as good in color, but better in shape. Pullet, 1st, good color, wins easy; 2d, loses on color to first.

BRAHMAS.

Light.—Cocks, 1st, poor comb, good hackle, good leg and toe feathering, good breast, tail and color, lacking a little in concave sweep to tail, being in good show condition makes him an easy winner, although a little short in leg; 2d, best comb in class, hackle not developed, does not show up very well, not so good in breast as first, good eye, leg and toe feathering, in fair show condition, nice concave sweep, good Brahma shape, wings not so good; 3d, poor comb, breast not full enough, tail not developed, wings fine, leg and toe feathering scant, not in good show condition, very large bird, will make splendid pullet breeder, off in breast; 4th, good comb, hackle, tail, and leg and toe feathering, fair wing, little off on breast, little long in back, lacks concave sweep, large bird, might have been placed nearer to first bird; 5th, very good specimen, lacks breast, good comb, good leg and toe feathering, broad tail, not yet developed, good Brahma shape, good wing, fair hackle, might have exchanged places with some of the others. Hens, 1st, large bird, good color, head not broad enough, fair hackle, good leg and toe feathering, fine tail, good back, fair wings, good Brahma shape, good eye; 2d, good eye, head not quite broad enough, good hackle, leg and toe feathering, a little off on wings, tail not so good, good Brahma shape; 3d, good head, wings not so good, eye a little off, a little fluffy on back, hackle fair, wings not so good, leg and toe feathering good, tail not as good as others; 4th, not in show condition; 5th, head not broad enough, wings not so good, fair hackle, a little scant in leg and toe feathering, tail not so good, nothing particular to recommend her. Cockerels, 1st, good comb, scant on breast, good leg and toe feathering and hackle, fair tail, good wings and head, dark in back, easy winner, well developed, good eyes; 2d, a well developed bird compared with others, comb not so good, good wings, good tail, lacking coverts, good head, close to first, leg and toe feathering good; 3d, not developed, has the making of a good bird, promises to be the best bird in the class; 4th, not developed, will make a good bird; 5th, not developed. Pullet, 1st, a good specimen, splendid wings, good hackle, eye and tail, an easy winner; 2d, undeveloped, other birds in the class good enough to take her place; 3d, a small baby; 4th, another small baby; 5th, should have been second. Pens, 1st, male bird a good one, strong in color, females good, strong in color, splendid tails, very uniform, well placed; 2d, good all round, lack in tails compared with 1st pen, not as strong in color, placed properly; 3d, young birds, promise well, good color, properly placed; 4th, fairly good, might be better, nothing particular to recommend them; 5th, cock not in feather, females moderately good

JOHN L. COST.

Dark Brahmas rather small classes, but averaging well up in quality; color in females lack that steel grey so desirable.

COCHINS.

We were greatly disappointed in the paucity of entries in these classes. Buff Cochins, however, made a good showing, Dr. C. Courtenay McLean, Charles A. Stewart, Holmhurst Poultry Yards, and others contributing some very fine birds. Had it not been for Mrs. S. Butterfield's string of Partridge Cochins, this famous and handsome breed would have been disgraced in point of numbers and quality at such an important show as the Pan. Whites and Blacks very light entries, but fair in quality.

LANGSHANS.

Black. — Cocks, 5. First, a very typical Langshan, but in bad moult; rest of class fair birds, but shown in bad condition. Hens, 8. First, almost an ideal in shape, fair in color, but has a trifle purple; 2d, very close to winner, lacks in shape, but a trifle better in color; 3d, very close to the winners; rest of class shown in bad condition. Cockerels, 6. First, a well finished bird, with very good color, but 2d and 3d will give him a hard chase a little later. Pullets, 5. First, fair pullet, shown in fine condition, but too long in back for an ideal Langshan; the rest very fair, but not in very good condition.

White.—Very small classes, but the young show extra good quality. F.

LEGHORNS.

Good big classes, with plenty of quality. Single Comb Browns brought out some crack entries from noted breeders, as will be seen by the awards. "Chet" Howell handled this class very carefully and conscientiously. Whether it was due to the poor light in the building allotted to the Browns or not, Mr. Howell in some of his awards "missed fire," i. e., in the male birds. There is no better judge of Browns than our jovial friend Howell, but the best of judges and "adjusters" will make awards at times that are at variance with accepted ideals for color and shape. In this instance we refer to the awards on cocks and cockerels only, as the awards on females were correct from what we could see and hear expressed by others. Perhaps the same could be said of the awards on males had Mr. Howell been present to explain a few points on color to the cranks interested in the dainty Browns. In cocks, the first, while a good strong bird, had a rather light colored hackle and a coarse comb, the 4th being evener in hackle and saddle and head points, with the second a very even colored bird fighting it out with him. In cockerels there was but little to choose between the first three, but the style and head points of the third prize bird many thought should have landed him a winner. Pens were fine in quality.

Rose Comb Browns light in numbers.

S. C. Whites very good classes. Cocks, especially first and second, strong in quality, fine plumage, and good style and head points. Both sold to Knapp Bros. Cockerels hardly equal to old birds, albeit first had fine style and plumage, but his earlobes had too much red at base and showed too little white to make him a dangerous bird later on; 2d, was better in lobe, but not so good in style. Winning females and pens very good.

There was a good display of R. C. White Leghorns.

Black Leghorns much better than the average.

Buff Leghorns.—Cocks, 13. First, a rather low down bird, not as good in head, comb or shank as 2d, but in better feather; the whole class in rather poor feather, and in our opinion several of the premiums would change three months from now. Hens, 13. In much better feather than cocks. First, a very even colored soft buff, with clean comb, good head, fair lobe; 2d, larger, but fails to 1st in head qualities. Cockerels, 16. First, an easy win, a grand, good all around bird; 2d, smaller, though very typical; some birds in this class very immature, we really liking the winner of 4th, who, with more age, will crowd the winners very close. Pullets, 18. First, a large, well styled bird, though coarse in comb; 2d, another good one, in fact, a good strong class throughout. Breeding pens, 8. A grand, good lot of birds, with awards rightly placed. WEED.

MINORCAS.

In cocks there were seven entries and some good birds among them, although none of them were at their best on account of moult. Those occupying the first three places best in size, style and color; some of the others too squatty, coarse in headgear, and white in face. Hens, 7. First, 2d and 3d were all high class hens and were far and away ahead of the balance of the class and in fact the three best S. C. Minorcas in the show, and were close together in quality. Cockerels, 6 First, a large framed bird, but not heavy in flesh and did not stand just right on his legs, but grand color and good form, with head, comb, lobe and wattles above the average; 2d, a large bird, well filled out, and of good color, although not as clean as the winner, not quite as good in comb, one lobe slightly streaked with red, and bad eye; 3d, a well developed bird and catchy to look at in the coop, but plumage full of bronze; 4th and 5th, young and miniature, will make good birds later on; one cockerel left out, as one wing had four tips missing and three missing on the other, and yet there was one grey tip left in each wing. Pullets, 5. All promising birds, some not as mature as the others. The winners best in size and combs. Pens, 2. The first a fine pen, best in size, combs and color; 2d, will show better later on, but must have two better colored females substituted to ever be able to crowd the winners.

White.—Cocks, 7. Those occupying 1st and 2d were away ahead of the rest of the class here, being in best condition and best in shape and headgear; some of those down farther in very bad condition. Hens, 5. Quite a good lot. The winner in best form and good in size. Cockerels, 7. A good promising lot, but none fully furnished. Winner best in shape, comb and color and in best condition. Pullets, 7. About four of them that promise later to develop into real good ones. Pens, 2. The winners best in size, combs and Minorca quality. "ZIM."

HAMBURGS.

Golden Spangled.—Cocks, 4. A rather ragged lot; the 2d prize the best bird in class. Hens, 4. Awards placed right. Cockerels, 2. Both fine young birds. Pullets, 3. An even lot.

Silver Spangled.—Cocks, 4. Good birds. Second, a very large, strong bird, failing to 1st in clearness of hackle. Hens, 5. Had those sawtooth markings that all breeders of this variety like to see. Cockerels, 8. Quite a class for Hamburgs, with some good birds, and the awards rightly placed. Pullets, 8. First, the best spangled pullet in the show, a good one, with other good ones in the lesser awards.

Golden Pencilled.—Cocks, 4. Little to choose between first three. Hens, 3. First, a grand one. Cockerels, 3. First, a gem, grand style, comb, lobes. Pullets, 3. An even lot.

Silver Pencilled.—Cocks, 3. Second shown in poor feather. Hens, cockerels and pullets small classes, with awards rightly placed.

Whites.—But three shown.

Blacks.—Cocks, 3. First shown in good feather and condition; 2d, with the largest lobe I ever saw, must make a very striking looking bird when in full feather. Hens, 3. First, a gem Cockerels, 4. There was evidently something under the surface that would have to explain the awards in this class. Pullets, 4. A very even lot, with little to choose between them. WEED.

ANDALUSIANS.

A walk-over for Newton Cosh & Co., who have a really fine string of birds.

BLACK SPANISH.

Fine classes; awards well placed.

DORKINGS.

The greatest lot ever seen at an American show. 86 entries being recorded. Judge Butterfield remarked: "The Silvers are the best I ever handled in this country." It was indeed a hard fight between the veteran, Henry Hales, Watson Westfall, A. Bogue and Miss Goodell, but Mr. Westfall had clear sailing after Hales took first on cock, winning all the honors in the rest of the classes. Mr. Bogue took about everything in the Colored Dorking line. White Dorkings, a fine class.

HOUDANS.

A big class of 50 birds and two pens. The winners up to fourth place good in quality for so early a show, showing plainly many of them were fitted for this big display. Cocks, 1st, a magnificent specimen, every section having extra good points, a finished bird in feathering, condition, show shape and style, one among a thousand; 2d, a good bird indeed "were the other fair charmer away," lacked on condition of crest and not over moult; 3d, 4th, 5th and 6th, extra fine birds. Hens, 1st, a good big, well shaped, standard colored hen, with more than a good crest; others in the class not in such good show shape, but indicate strongly exceptional merit. Cockerels, winner easily first, a big, overweight, very early bird of good standard markings; 2d, a coming bird; 3d and 4th, too dark, but good shaped specimens, much underweight; otherwise good specimens in class not placed owing to feathers on feet and shanks. Pullets, No. 1566 a fine specimen in finish, style, and color markings on entire body, a very large, pretty crest, with too much white in centre and some broken in shape, easily first if it was not for two stubs of feathers between toes. First, a nice large, well colored bird, with an undeveloped, even black and white crest, indicating great worth as a breeder and a coming hen; 2d, good for the time of the year; 3d, was too dark, but had a fine crest and was a well shaped female; 4th, way above the average class of birds, but set back to place by supposed defects, but given the benefit of the doubt. Pens, only two in class and neither came up to expectations. Cockerel in winning pen shows many sterling qualities, as did one pullet in 2d pen.

FRANK W. McKENZIE.

ANCONAS.

Small but good classes.

POLISH.

Well represented with plenty of quality in most classes, competition being very strong.

REDCAPS

Were here in numbers and had their combs with them.

RHODE ISLAND REDS

Were well represented, as were Buff Orpingtons.

CORNISH INDIAN GAMES.

As a class, I feel sure that, as far as high quality goes, it was the best lot of Indian Games ever shown in America or England, by what I have seen in the past. The females were the best lot I ever saw for color lacing and shape combined. Cocks.—This class was composed of 15 extra good birds. The 1st had the fine shape and color combined and won only on this, his comb could be much better; 2d, was a cock that is simply fine in color and good in shape and only lost for being dubbed; 3d, was a fine styled bird and had plenty of weight and very hard in feather, should be much better when in full feather; 4th, was the hardest bird in the lot and only lost on color of wings and hackle too black, had the best comb of any bird in the class; 5th, a good bird, with plenty of size and of good color, loses to 4th by being in moult and poor comb; the rest of the birds in this class were all worthy of mention. Hens.—This was simply a wonderful class both for shape and color. The 1st hen was an ideal laced hen in all sections and a gem in every way, in fact, the best hen I ever handled; 2d, was not so fine in lacing, was a little larger and about even for the first place, as she was a little ahead in shape, both being even in golden bay shade throughout; 3d, was about the same type as 2d hen, but lost on the lacing of different shades of bay color, grand in shape, and will be a hard hen to beat at the winter shows; 4th, a real nice shaped hen and of distinct lacing, and only lost by having the two or three different shades of golden bay, by winter should be in better plumage; the other hens were all worthy of mention and an extra good lot Cockerels.—The 1st was a model Indian Game both for shape and color and won easily; 2d and 3d were of the same type and color, both of good size and good in shape, but second won on comb over the third; the other cockerels in this class are not matured enough, but may develop into birds that would change the awards of 4th, 5th and 6th later on. As a class, they are all a good lot. Pullets.—As a class, were very fine, but on account of being so early they were not matured enough. The 1st was an easy winner by being well grown and extra good in shape, with elegant lacing; 2d and 3d were of the same type and color, both being good in shape and were very hard to place; 4th, a nice pullet, but too young, loses on lacing on back and saddle; the others were a very nice lot and should develop into some winners for the winter shows.

ADAM THOMPSON.

GAMES.

Black B. Reds.—Cocks, a good entry of nine birds, including some very typical specimens. The best class of Game cocks we ever remember seeing in America. They were somewhat out of condition in respect to feather, but the quality was there all the same. Awards about rightly placed. Hens, 8. Lacking in quality to the cocks. First and second prize birds stood well out from the others. Cockerels, 8. Fairly good class. The awards well placed. Some promising youngsters amongst them and will be heard of again at the winter shows when matured. First, a great raking bird, with fine long head, seemed somewhat cowed and needs training. We liked 4th (Crowe) and are of opinion he will make a better than either second or third birds placed in front of him here. Pullets. 7. Not a very grand lot taken as a whole. First, an easy winner, still by no means a "flyer." The entire class different in color, some very shafty, a bad fault in a Black Red Game.

Silver Duckwings. — Cocks, only 3. Out of feather. First and 2d, good shape; 3d, too squatty and of the Dorking type. Hens, 4. First, an easy win and a grand, reachy, good shaped bird; 2d, only moderate, neat head her best point. Cockerels, 4 Nothing extra in the class. When finished, 2d prize (Barber) will make the best of the quartette. Pullets, 5. First, an easy win and a good one; 2d, same owner (Barber), compact, good youngster, but will never have the station of first prize bird.

Golden Duckwings.—Cocks, 2. Both rattling good big specimens, not much to choose between them. Hens, 2. First, a good one. Cockerels, 5. Two pens empty. Winners well placed, but nothing extra grand in the class. Pullets, 4. First, a promising chicken, away ahead of any of the others, nice, reachy, good color, and a fairly good head.

Red Piles.—Cocks, 6. In this class we could not quite follow the decisions, as we think 4th cock equal to anything in the class. Hens, 8. Pen 1750 empty. A good class and the winners well chosen. Cockerels, 4. Pen 1757 empty. In this class we prefer second to first, the latter being too long behind and a smaller bird than second. Pullets, 6. Fair class of chicks, but second prize bird would have been our choice for premier honors, sounder in color and better in every section.

Birchen Games were few in numbers. First and second pullets very good all round, second showing signs of Brown Red breeding on the head, otherwise the best of the two.

In White Games Spraker had it all to himself, but we notice an improvement in this variety. Stick to it, Joe; you will get there some day.

JOHN GLASGOW.

GAME BANTAMS.

Black B. Reds made a grand showing, numbering 45 birds in the four classes. The winning cock was a bird of wonderful reach, very hard in feather, on the large side and too high in tail; 2d, a nice reachy, stylish, even colored bird; 3d, smaller than the others, nice top color, rather long in wing. First hen, small, neat and stylish; 2d, another good one, with plenty of style and reach. First and second cockerels looked to be brothers, small, neat, hard in feather, with plenty of style and reach, first being brighter in top color. The winning pullet was very small, neat and stylish and good in color; 2d, another nice, neat, stylish little thing.

Brown Reds were a fairly good class, numbering 17 birds in four classes, the winning cock, hen and pullet being the pick of the lot.

Duckwings numbered 36 birds in eight classes. In the male classes the winning Silver cockerel was a bird of especial merit, being fine in style, reach, shape and color. The winning Golden cock was a nice bird, although a bit on the big side. The winning Golden cockerel has the making of a fine bird with a little more time, and the 2d prize bird was another good one, although a bit large. The hen classes contained nothing alarming, if we except the winning Golden hen, which was a nice tidy little bird. The Silver pullets were a particularly strong lot, the winner being a gem for style and reach; 2d, another good one, but lacking the reach and softness of color of the winner; 3d and 4th were both good enough to win in almost any company. The winning Golden pullet was stylish and hard in feather, an extra good one; 2d, another good one, close up.

Piles numbered 30 birds in four classes. First cock very reachy, hard in feather, a trifle long in wing and high in tail; 2d, very similar in type, not quite as tall; 4th, a very typical shaped bird, with nicely carried tail, might have gone higher. First hen very small and hard in feather, not the best of color; 2d, better in color, nice in style and reach, might have won; 3d, a clinking good, rich colored little hen, might have moved up. First cockerel a nice stylish, reachy little bird of good color. First pullet very racy and stylish, rather light in color; 2d, richer in color, plenty of style and reach, must have pushed the winner close.

Birchens, numbering 18 in four classes, were good. The winning cock a sweet bird, with lots of style and reach, grand color and beautiful lacing, was easily the gem of the lot.

A. O. V. Game Bantams numbered 20 in four classes, all Whites, the winning cock, hen, cockerel and pullet standing well out, the winning pullet being particularly "sweet."

BANTAMS OTHER THAN GAME.

There were 416 birds in these classes, which number would make a good size show alone. Below we will give only a brief description of the birds winning 1st, 2d and 3d prizes. There were eight prizes awarded in each class, but for want of space cannot mention all in detail. Many a good one that could win at most any other show did not get placed here. The best breeders of America and Canada competed, which is good evidence of the quality.

Golden and Silver Sebright classes the largest and best we ever saw at any show. Many a bird not mentioned here was fit to grace and win at most any other show in this country excepting here and in a number of classes a toss up between 1st and 2d prize birds. Many an old winner had to doff its hat here, as will be noticed by the awards below. In Goldens there were 39 single entries and four pens, viz., 10 cocks, 9 hens, 10 cockerels, 10 pullets. First cock a typical shaped specimen, very small, well and distinctly laced on a good ground color, entirely free from the objectionable bay edging, clear in wing and tail, might have been better in comb, but his other superior points made him an easy winner; 2d, another nice little bird, loses on head points and general carriage; 3d, well laced bird, color not up and not so clear in wings and tail, but good in head points. Hens, 1st, a beauty, of typical shape and carriage, clear in wings and tail and narrow and evenly laced throughout; 2d, another beautifully laced one, but not so clear in wings and tail, loses on this and general shape and style; 3d, well laced throughout, somewhat larger than 1st and 2d and not so clear in wings and tail. In our mind the awards were rightly placed; think them the best we ever saw. There were other birds in the class which would do credit to any show. Cockerels, 1st, small, well laced, of good color, clear wings and tail, and fine in head points; 2d, another good one, close up, loses on comb; 3d, promising bird, but undeveloped, consequently loses to 2d. Pullets, 1st, typical little bird, clear in wings and tail, evenly laced throughout of a distinct color, grand style and carriage; 2d, lacing good, color not up; 3d, fails in head points, otherwise good fair bird.

Silver Sebrights, 35, viz., 8 cocks, 9 hens, 9 cockerels, 9 pullets. The same can be said of these as the Goldens. Cock, 1st, a beautiful laced specimen throughout, clear in wings and tail, good head points, a trifle larger than we like, but an easy winner; 2d, another good one, fails to 1st in lacing of hackle and head points; 3d, a beautiful laced bird of the right shape feathers, small, good style, not in condition, right in moult, loses on this and head points. Hens, 1st, a little gem, with a narrow and distinct lacing from head to tail, perfectly clear in wings and tail, an easy winner; 2d, another grand hen, but loses to 1st in wing and tail points; 3d, trifle heavier laced, color not as distinct and fails in breast lacing. Cockerels, 1st, well laced, of good head points, trifle large; 2d, grand style bird, lacings heavier than we like; 3d, too young to show to best advantage, nevertheless a good one. Pullets, 1st, narrow and evenly laced throughout, of good color and shape of feather, clear wings and tail, an easy winner; 2d, lacings somewhat heavier and not as good in head points and style; 3d, lacing rather dull in color compared with 1st and 2d. Awards rightly placed.

Black Rose Combs, 31, viz., 11 cocks, 9 hens, 5 cockerels, 6 pullets, and some grand little birds among them; as a whole, they were a beautiful lot, especially 1st cock and cockerel. Cock, 1st, a typical little Rose Comb, very small, good head points, plenty of feather and very stylish; 2d, good comb and color, grand style, width and length of feather all that could be desired, trifle larger than we like, consequently loses to 1st; 3d, another nice one, very stylish, loses on length of feather and head points. Hens, 1st, beautiful little bird, with good comb and lobes; 2d, loses on head points; 3d, trifle larger, color not up, nevertheless a good one. Cockerels, 1st, the gem of the class, remarkably fine in head points, an easy winner, also wins special for best Black Rose Comb in show; 2d, another good one, not so well furnished in tail, a little later in season will show better, not fully developed, nevertheless a grand one; 3d, promising bird, but too young to go higher at present. Pullets, 1st, fine in comb and lobes, good color and general make up; 2d, loses to first in head points; 3d, later in season will show better, too young to go further up.

White Rose Combs, 15, viz., 4 cocks, 5 hens, 3 cockerels, 3 pullets, all typical little birds of the breed, not a poor one in this class.

White Booted, while not a large class, represented some of the best yards in this country and Canada.

Black Tailed Japanese, 15; White, 18; Black, 6. There were some remarkably fine birds in these classes, especially the 1st Black Tailed cock, cockerel and pullet. The same can be said of the Whites; balance of these classes were not up to our expectations. While the Blacks were not a strong class, we saw some fine specimens, especially the 1st hen, cockerel and pullet.

Buff Cochins, 42, viz., cocks, 10; hens, 12; cockerels, 10; pullets, 10. This was a warm class, many especially fine ones, and, as a whole, were the most evenly colored lot we ever saw, considering the number of birds. First cock, typical shaped little bird, good comb and feathering, with a nice shade of buff color well blended, the best of the class; 2d, good one, loses to 1st in hardness of feather and shape, we notice the same fault in this one as 1st, i. e., plumage not clear, somewhat mottled, with lighter shade; 3d, larger bird, nice even shade of buff, shows some light in wing; awards rightly placed. Hens, 1st, a fine specimen, good color, shape, feather and cushion, an easy winner; 2d, loses on shape and color; 3d, not so even in color and long in feather as her predecessors. Cockerels, 1st, nice little bird, rather hard and short in feather, but good head points; 2d, too long on legs, not uniform in color, and several shades too dark and hard in feather; 3d, short on legs, good shape, profusely feathered, with good head points, our choice for 1st. Pullets all nice little birds; awards well placed.

White Cochins, 33, viz., 7 cocks, 10 hens, 8 cockerels, 8 pullets, and a very fine lot as a whole, especially the winning birds, which were gems of the breed; awards well placed in all classes.

Black Cochins, 28, viz., 4 cocks, 8 hens, 7 cockerels, 9 pullets. Cock, 1st, a wonderfully fine specimen, black to the skin of the right shade, profusely feathered throughout, an easy winner, this bird won first at last New York show; 2d, another good one, not as short on legs or as profusely feathered as 1st; 3d, loses on shape, length of feather and general make up; awards rightly placed. Hens, 1st, good cushion and profusely feathered, we were inclined to think her wry tailed; 2d, a fine one, short on legs, good length of feather, color right, should have been placed higher, we thought; 3d, another good one, but fails in length and softness of feather and cushion. Cockerels, 1st, nice catchy little bird; 2d, well up to first, a toss up as to merits between them; 3d, trifle longer on legs and not so loose in feather. Pullets, 1st, good shape, profusely feathered, and black to the skin; 2d and 3d, good birds; awards well placed.

Polish were a nice lot, entries all from Canada, but we were surprised to see some bearded variety shown with white color legs. We admired them for having whiskers or muffs. We were told they are bred this way in England. Although our Standard does not mention this in favor or against, we were inclined to think favorably of them.

Light Brahmas were not a large entry, but made up in quality. The winners were typical little birds of the breed.

TURKEYS, DUCKS AND GEESE.

Fine classes, excepting a few of the rarer varieties of ducks. Report on these classes not received as we go to press.

ORNAMENTAL FOWL.

ASTHMA CURE FREE!

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in all Cases.

SENT ABSOLUTELY FREE ON RECEIPT OF POSTAL.

WRITE YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS PLAINLY.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 130th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes at Hagerstown.

Barred P. Rocks.—Large entry; quality better than last year. First cock, a shade lighter than considered proper, but good in straight barring, wing fair, not a bad shaped bird, wins on clearness of barring and evenness of color; 2d, good in shape, not clear in color, loses on color to first; 3d, too dark and smutty in surface color, ticked in hackle, good shape, smutty in tail; 5th, a nice barred bird, but out of condition. Hens, quality good. First hen, a bright, clean cut, narrow barred, evenly spaced in barring, not in prime condition, but an easy winner; 2d, loses to first in strength of barring and shape. Cockerels a very even lot. First, a well barred bird in every section and one of those clean cut birds, the light bar being white and clear, plumage being free from cloudy appearance, good comb, good bay eye, a good all around bird; 2d, very well matured, but not as clear or as shapely barred as first, loses on color; 3d, close up, but lacking depth of color. Pullets, 1st, 2d and 3d all the same style of barring. First, wins on color; 2d, not good in wing; 3d, weak in barring of breast, feathers not properly tipped. Pens, four in number. Pullets in first pen bright and clean cut in plumage, matching better in color and winning over second on color; 2d, headed by a large matured cockerel, but smoky in plumage, pullets weak in wing bars; 3d and 4th, not well matched, females of different type and of different shades of color.

Buff P. Rocks.—A strong class, containing many fine specimens; several nice birds in this class, fine color, could not be placed owing to lack of age. First cock, a grand bird in color, even shade from head to tail, clear in wing and tail, no black or white in any section, sound as a knot in color, an easy winner; 2d, a good bird, but showing some foreign color, not even in surface; 3d, loses to second on condition. Hens, all the placed birds good. First and second clear and sound in color, first winning on depth of color; 3d, a large, well surfaced hen, showing black in wing and tail. Cockerels, 1st wins on color; 2d, not quite as good in shape or color; 3d, bordering on the red shade and not even in surface, well matured, showing foreign color in wing and tail. Pullets, a class of hot ones. First, a clear bird all through, well matured, good shape; 2d, fine in surface, showing foreign color in tail, somewhat on the Wyandotte type; 3d, 4th and 5th, all good ones. Pens, four in number, fair in quality, lacking age. First wins on color; 3d, loses to 2d on condition.

White P. Rocks.—A lot of good ones and will be heard from later on. First cock wins on shape, being a large typical Rock in shape, good color; 3d, loses to 2d in color. Hens, 1st, better shaped and larger than 2d, wins easily. Cockerels, 1st, wins on shape, good in comb and color, a nice one; 2d, high on legs, flat in breast, but very white. Pullets, 1st and 2d might have changed places, both good ones; 3d, loses to 2d on size and shape. Pens, all good. First wins on size, shape and color; 2d, not as well matched in females or in as good condition as first.

White Wyandottes.—A strong class, containing many good birds unplaced. First cock, large, strong in shape and color, in a class all by himself; 2d, not as good in shape or as white as first bird. Hens, 1st, wins on condition and color, a little stronger in shape than 2d; 2d, not showing proper curves, too much on the Plymouth Rock shape; 3d, a good hen, not in fine condition. Cockerels, a fairly good lot. Second could have easily changed places with first, second being a much better type of Wyandotte and just as white as first bird; 3d, a good bird, but not matured. Pullets, 1st, 2d and 3d—in fact, all placed were good.

Silver Wyandottes.—In this class were some stars, especially in pullets. First pullet, splendidly laced, well matured bird—in fact, a gem, will be heard from later; 2d pullet a very good one, but outclassed. Cocks, 1st, large, good shape, not in pink of condition, fairly good color, we liked third placed bird better and think he should have gone higher up. Hens showed quality, but in poor condition. First hen a clean cut, nicely laced bird, but not in as good plumage as second. Cockerels very good, but nothing alarming. First, well matured, very good color, little short on legs, condition and size carried him through; 2d, we think a better colored bird, but lacks age. Only one pen shown; quality fair.

Buff Wyandottes.—A grand, good lot and a large entry. First cock, hen, cockerel and pullet hard to beat. First cock about the proper shade of color, good Wyandotte shape, wins on evenness of color; 2d, close up; 3d, outclassed on condition. Hens, a good lot. First wins on evenness of surface and clearness of color; 2d, a different type of hen, not as clear or free from foreign color. First cockerel a nice even bird in color, good comb, good shape, wins on color and shape; 2d, not even on surface. No poor birds in this class. Pullets, the cream of the exhibit. First, a gem, fine even surface color throughout, as near clear in wing and tail as any we have seen, wins easy; 2d, a good one, but not as even in color. The best lot seen so far this season. Pens good. First wins out on color and size; 2d, close up; 3d and 4th, good, but not in the pink of condition.

Golden Wyandottes. — Entry light, quality just fair.

Black Wyandottes.—Fair entry, quality number one. Placed birds all good, a credit to any show.

Partridge Wyandottes —Not a large entry. Awards poorly placed. Second cockerel the gem of the class. First cockerel way off in color. There surely was some mistake in placing this award. Females showed some nice pencilling. First wins on shape and color in cocks, hens and pullets. This variety shows a marked improvement over last year's exhibit. M. E. WURTS.

Poultry Breeders' Association of Toronto.

Editor American Fancier: There was a large and enthusiastic gathering of the leading poultry fanciers of Toronto at the first meeting of the above association, held in St. George's hall on Thursday, October 17th.

The election of officers was proceeded with and resulted as follows: Hon. president, W. E H. Massey; president, J. M. Wilson; first vice-president, J. N. O'Neil; second vice-president, J. H. Shales; secretary-treasurer, E J. Dewey; executive committee, James Henderson, W. H. Bessey and D. L. Sutherland.

The executive committee was instructed to draft a constitution and by-laws, to be submitted at the next meeting. An excellent program will be arranged and a different subject discussed at each meeting.

The members who visited the Pan-American will each address the November meeting for five or ten minutes and give a short account of the classes in which they were interested.

E. J. DEWEY, Sec'y-Treas.

The Boston Show.

The next Boston show will be held in Mechanics' Building, Boston, Mass, during the week of January 14–19, 1902. The premium list will be ready for distribution after December 1st.

The classification will include all standard breeds, as well as novice classes for same, and in addition to this many breeds and varieties not included in the Standard, land and water fowls, pigeons, pet stock and cats.

We wish to call special attention to our novice classes, which are open to any breeder in the world who has not won a first or second prize at Boston. These classes are intended for the encouragement of the amateur or the fancier who would love to exhibit his stock in line with others and only compete with those of like experience with himself. It is the new exhibitors' show in the same hall with the other and cooped in line and alongside of the open classes.

Regular and special cash prizes at Boston have always surpassed any offering at any show in America. This winter we shall offer more cash specials than ever before; on every breed and variety will be placed liberal specials for the benefit of exhibitors. All winnings payable at the treasurer's office in the exhibition hall on the last day of the show.

Many specialty clubs have voted to meet and exhibit with us; all are cordially invited to come. There are a number of rooms at the disposal of those wishing for meetings in the hall, and we are always willing to lend our assistance to a pleasant meeting of such organization.

For premium list, show catalogues, or information of any kind about the show, address A. R. SHARP, Taunton, Mass.

A BILL OF FARE

at any first-class hotel or restaurant includes chicken in some form. It is a task for caterers to get nice plump poultry, especially during the early fall. Most flocks are well fed, but lice and mites are allowed free course in the coops and on the birds and this will prevent the hens from laying and the chickens from growing more than any other one thing in the business. This is where Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies come in.

A FALL FAIR is a good place to show the product of your skill at poultry raising. The competition is such that no lousy, skinny birds stand a ghost of a show in winning any of the best prizes. You can use Lambert's Death to Lice Powder on your birds while they are in the show coops, but to get most benefit from this remedy it should be used for weeks before showing.

THE REGULAR FARE of every well kept poultry yard includes all the necessities for growth, fattening and the production of eggs. You can feed everything under the sun, and house the flocks in gilt-edged palaces, and still you will need to treat them for lice or they will continually harbor vermin. Grain is now too high in price to feed a lot of lice. You can save the cost of many a box of Lambert's Death to Lice on your feed bills by using it often and liberally.

A FAIR OFFER: We put up four remedies for poultry vermin to cover all the demands in this line. We sell in all sizes of package from 10c each upwards, and send samples postpaid for this price in everything but "Liquid" which is not mailable. We agree to return the money if not satisfactory in every way. We send a 64-page book by mail free to everyone sending their address. If you are in a hurry send 10c. at same time stating what kind of lice you desire to knock out and we will mail trial package. 73-34

Big Money in Chickens

By Using a Globe Incubator Many Men and Women Add $500 a Year to their Income.

Easy Work and Little Expense.

Any man or woman can raise chickens successfully with a Globe Incubator, and there is a lot of money to be made all the year round by the small as well as the large chicken-raiser. There is always a good cash market for chickens, and the Globe Incubator hatches out healthier, stronger chicks and more of them to the 100 eggs than any other incubator on the market. It is so simple to operate and regulate that any person can handle it successfully, and to day hundreds of men and women, business men, preachers, teachers, mechanics, railroad men, clerks and day laborers as well as farmers and farmers' wives are adding a snug sum to their annual income with chicken-money and without any cash outlay to speak of. There are to day many of the large chicken-raisers who number their profits by the thousands of dollars and occupy whole farms with their chicken-houses and yards who started with one Globe Incubator and it did the rest. Leisure hours with the Globe will produce chickens for family use and net a nice sum of pocket-money besides, every year. Write C. C. Shoemaker, Box 440, Freeport, Ill., to day and he will send you his price list and catalogue of Globe Incubators and tell you free how you can add $500 or more to your annual income in an easy, pleasant manner and not require much cash to start. 26-38

And keep them in healthy condition all the year round Like BANNER EGG FOOD AND TONIC.

It starts the pullets laying, and will keep them at it all through the winter, when eggs are very scarce.

We are having our SIXTH ANNUAL SALE during NOVEMBER and have some special inducements to offer those who have never tried it, as well as old customers, who know a good thing when they see it.

During this sale we will sell a 1 lb box for 15c; or 7 1 lb boxes for $1. The regular price is, 1 lb box 25c; or 5 1 lb boxes, $1, so it will be to your advantage to order this at the reduced price. In addition to the reduction in price, we will give with each order for 7 1 lb boxes, one of KUHN'S EGG RECORD AND ACCOUNT BOOKS, which retail at 25c. each, or to those who order $2 worth, or 14 1 lb boxes, we will give a book, which every poultryman needs, entitled "LITTLE CHICKS," which retails for 50c. each. It contains special articles by M. K. BOYER, P. H. JACOBS, G. W. NONES, W. W. KULP, A. G. DUSTON, A. F. COOPER, M. V. NORYS, and other well known poultrymen. The information it contains is worth $100 00 to any breeder.

Remember these special prices and offers are for the month of NOVEMBER ONLY and no orders will be filled after NOVEMBER 30TH, at the above reduced prices.

Send your orders in at once, and we will fill orders as soon as received.

N. B.—If sent by mail, add 20c. for each box for postage, but the 7 boxes are cheaper by express, purchaser paying all charges.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION LABEL FULTON COUNTY No. 256

SATURDAY NOVEMBER 9 1901

From the Editor's Perch.

The Pan-American brought the big fall shows to a brilliant close. The first of the big winter shows is Washington, D. C., November 19 to 23.

That the Washington show will prove a success is assured. The management is of the best, and in securing "Frank" Spahr to superintend the poultry department a ten strike was made. Intending exhibitors should write at once to John M. Allen, 3419 U street, Washington, D. C., for premium list. The latter is full of special besides the tempting regular prizes.

Elmira, N. Y., will be in full swing with a big show December 17 to 20. The old guard is in line, and that means an unqualified success. It will be a fanciers' show, with such men as H. E. Benedict, C. E. Howell, G. M. Diven and others in charge. Johnstown not holding a show this season, many of the boys are looking Elmiraward.

Rose Comb White Leghorns are becoming more and more popular as their real intrinsic merit become better known. The display at the Pan-American was really fine, Mr. W. W. Babcock, Campbell, N. Y., showing an unusually strong string.

Houdans are certainly filling up classes at our leading shows, which is as it should be. The beauty and practical value of this great French fowl entitle it to a front place among popular and useful fowl.

Valley Farm's Faverolles at the Pan created considerable discussion and attracted much interest. Being purely a utilitarian fowl, the "bearded ladies and gentlemen" from France looked as if they might satisfy the palate of the most particular epicure. Manager "Fred" Crangle says they are great layers of big white eggs, and when once perfected to the new Standard, Faverolles will fall in line with the popular market fowl of this country.

A very fallacious idea exists that open laced Silver Wyandottes, especially those containing English blood, are white or too light in under-color. If anything, the reverse is the case. An examination of numerous specimens showed a slate under-color and in one, a very open laced pullet, almost black under-color.

While wonderful progress has been made in the breeding of Silver Wyandotte females, there is still much room for improvement in the males. The lack of real silvery hackles and saddles is very noticeable.

Mr. W. E. Walden in the Poultry Herald relieves his mind of the following:

"A Houdan is the most complete dunghill fowl now bred. If you desire a fowl that our fathers raised before special varieties were known, procure a Houdan, and what have you then? A small fowl with a minute top-knot, which looks as though it was a cross between a White Crested Black Polish and—oh, yes—nothing. A tail that is void of any particular shape and a pinkish colored speckled leg. If in all this you have not the greatest conglomeration of nothings, I cannot tell where you will find them. The boy said, 'Mamma, I counted all the chickens but the speckled one; that would not stand still to be counted.' That speckled one was undoubtedly a Houdan and was killed for Sunday dinner, but what a dinner they must have had. No breast meat; in fact, nothing. I have no bad feeling in this matter, but I desire for the benefit of a poultry-loving public that such feathered tribes should be stricken from the Standard and that boys be not allowed to purchase such and then say after raising a flock, 'The poultry matter is a hallucination.'"

A more malicious, biassed and misleading statement could not well have been constructed and allowed to find its way into the columns of a reputable poultry journal. The Houdan needs no defense at this late day, its thoroughbred character, excellent laying qualities and superior edible qualities being well established and known the world over. The writer bred Houdans over sixteen years ago, and the young broods of chicks were the admiration of all. The fine white eggs put to shame many of the ill shaped, vari-colored and bespeckled eggs of some of the so-called popular breeds. A well bred Houdan carries plenty of breast and back meat and withal is small in bone. It is strange that the greatest experts in table poultry, the French, stick to the Houdan as a superior breed for the purpose.

While some may be skeptical regarding White Belgian Hares, it is nevertheless a fact that August D. Arnold's exhibit at the Pan of these albinoes attracted much attention and elicited many favorable comments. His Blue Belgians were also voted to be rather handsome animals. Whatever the result of the controversy may be regarding the origin and genuineness of these new hares, the fact is, they "caught on."

Even "Burt" Bryant, the Polish and White Wyandotte crank, of Johnson's Creek, N. Y., has taken up White Belgians and likes them.

We regret to learn that Mr. George E. Howard, editor of the Feather, was unable to attend the Pan-American show owing to illness.

Barefooted Light Brahmas are the latest production of an Illinois breeder. They receive the endorsement of the American Agriculturist and also embellish the title page of the November 2d issue. Whether they will meet the fate of the Columbian Wyandotte—a bird with Light Brahma plumage, clean legs and rose comb—we are not prepared to say. The stately Light Brahma minus leg and toe feathering would lose one of its greatest charms. The latter gives the finishing touch to an ideal bird of strength, weight and beauty.

Free to Poultry Raisers.

Cut green bone has long been recognized as the most valuable of all poultry foods, but only in recent years has there been a machine made which will cut it with ease and rapidity. The Humphrey Green Bone and Vegetable Cutter (the open hopper machine) has come rapidly to the front, largely because of its guarantee to cut more bone in less time and with less labor than any other, or your money back. The manufacturers put out a beautiful book describing the machine, the use of green bone, and other poultry topics. It also contains blank pages for a year's record of your poultry. Send for a free copy. Address Humphrey & Sons, Box 72, Joliet, Ill.

Correction.

Editor American Fancier: We notice an error in the awards at Brockton, Mass. What we won on Black Langshans was 1st on cockerel, 1st on pullet, 2d on pen; White, 2d on hen. In Silver Polish we won 1st and 2d on cock, 1st on hen, 1st cockerel, 1st pullet, 1st pen.

CUTTING & ESTES.

Nash, Mass., Oct. 28, 1901.

Middletown Poultry Club.

Editor American Fancier: The members of Middletown Poultry Club are now booming things for their second annual show which takes place December 10th to 14th, 1901. Mr. H. B. May of Natick, Mass., who needs no introduction, will judge the show, and with Middletown the hot-bed of live, up-to-date fanciers, it can safely be said that we will have a show second to none in the middle west. From inquiries thus far received we expect from 1000 to 1200 birds in the show room. Sixty per cent of all entry fees will be paid in regular cash premiums, besides several handsomely engraved silver cups. We are proud of the fact that we have always paid our premiums in full and expect to be as prompt in the future. All information regarding premiums and other matters pertaining to the show will be cheerfully given by N. O. SELBY, Sec'y.

Middletown, Ohio.

Take Notice.

Will the party taking three Barred P. Rock pullets by mistake at the great Atlanta, Ga., show, please return them to L. C. Dorsey, Sunny Side, Ga., or to Alf. Bertling, Supt.

Correction.

Editor American Fancier: I see in your report of the Fulton County Fair, held at Johnstown, N. Y., the awards on B. P. Rocks were: Cockerel 2d, J. C. Rice; pullet 2d, W. A. Fuller. This is a mistake, as I won the same and received my check in full. A. STORER.

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 29, 1901.

The Big Score Card Show.

The show at Indianapolis, Indiana, December 4th to 10th, 1901, will be held by the Fanciers' Association of Indiana, who will this year depart from their usual custom of opening their show on Monday and closing on Saturday, and instead, will open on Wednesday, December 4th, and close the following Tuesday. This will enable all exhibitors to ship their stock, both to and from the show, so as to not necessitate its being held over Sunday by the express companies, and it is a plan that is meeting with the hearty approval of prospective exhibitors. S. B. Lane will judge the Mediterranean class and Wyandottes; Ben S. Myers the Asiatic class and Plymouth Rocks; Wesley Lanius, Games and Game Bantams; H. C. Green, turkeys, ducks and geese. For premium list or other information, address the secretary, C. W. Hackleman, 818 Majestic Building, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Notice.

The Mt. Penn Poultry and Pigeon Association will give its third annual show and exhibition at Miller's Family Park Pavilion, December 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th, and promise one of the best shows that was ever held in Reading, Pa. The judge is A. E. Warner of Baltimore, Md., who will pass upon the poultry. This gentleman is well known and his name on a score card is as good as gold. The premium list will be out shortly and will be mailed for the asking. It will contain some valuable premiums and specials. Write for one to C. H. Coltrian, secretary, Reading, Pa. All birds will have the best of care and guarantee fair dealing.

Certificate of Sale.

This is to certify that I have sold to B. L. Barnes, Howel, Ill., the 1st and 2d prize Buff Wyandotte pullets at Cambridge and Syracuse, N. Y., 1901; also 1st pullet Roohester and a grand solid cockerel. R. BROOKS ROBBINS.

Cambridge, N. Y., Oct. 28, 1901.

Show at Belvidere, Ill.

Editor American Fancier: Arrangements are now being made and nothing will be left undone to make the 13th annual show of the Northern Illinois Poultry, Pigeon, Belgian Hare and Pet Stock show at Belvidere, Ill., Jan. 6–12, 1902, the largest in the history of the association and one of the largest in the state.

Large cash and special premiums will be offered on all classes.

Communications are being received by the secretary from all parts of the country from breeders who are planning to exhibit at this great show.

This show being one of the oldest in the country, is evidence that this association deals honestly and is square with its exhibitors and offers good prizes awarded by good judges.

Chas. McClave and Geo. Holden, who are well known and competent judges, will place the awards.

Salem, Ohio.

The Quaker City Fanciers' Club, Salem, Ohio, announces that their catalogue is now ready for mailing, and they will be glad to send a copy to anyone making request. Send in your name and your friends' names. B. N. Pierce will judge the poultry, and the Club members are determined to have the best show in Eastern Ohio, $300 in specials. The show dates are December 24th to 28th. The secretary is Dr. H. E. Phillips, Salem, Ohio.

Mr. Northup Confirms Mr. Trethaway's Statements.

Editor American Fancier: I was glad to see Mr. Trethaway's letter in the American Fancier of October 19 denying the report that he has borrowed birds from me to show. Whoever started such a report must have done so maliciously and knowing it was false, and I wish to verify what Mr. Trethaway says about having birds from my yards. I have never sent him a bird except the two he mentions, and the circumstances are just as he relates them. I will further say that I never loaned Mr. Trethaway a bird for any purpose and he never asked such a favor of me.

I wish that every reader of the American Fancier who has ever heard any person say that Mr. Trethaway has ever bought or borrowed any bird or birds from me to show would ask that person to tell through the American Fancier just what he knows about it and give his authority. I believe that if the report can be correctly traced, it will be shown that it started from some jealous person who could not borrow or buy enough birds to defeat Mr. Trethaway and hoped to ease his own position by making the public believe that he had my birds to compete with as well as Mr. Trethaway's.

How to Dress and Ship Poultry.

In the first place, poultry should be well fed and well watered, and then kept from 18 to 24 hours without food before killing. Stock dresses out brighter when well watered and adds to the appearance. Full crops injure the appearance and are liable to sour, and when this does occur correspondingly lower prices must be accepted than obtainable for choice stock. Never kill poultry by wringing the neck.

To Dress Chickens.—Kill by bleeding in the mouth or opening the veins of the neck; hang by the feet until properly bled. Leave head and feet on and do not remove intestines nor crop. Scalded chickens sell best to home trade, and dry picked best to shippers, so that either manner of dressing will do if properly executed. For scalding chickens the water should be as near the boiling point as possible without boiling; pick the legs dry before scalding; hold by the head and legs and immerse and lift up and down three times; if the head is immersed it turns the color of the comb and gives the eyes a shrunken appearance, which leads buyers to think the fowl has been sick; the feathers and pin feathers should then be removed immediately very cleanly and without breaking the skin; then "plump" by dipping ten seconds in water nearly or quite boiling hot, and then immediately into cold water; hang in a cool place until the animal heat is entirely out of the body. To dry pick chickens properly, the work should be done while the chickens are bleeding; do not wait and let the bodies get cold. Dry picking is much more easily done while the bodies are warm. Be careful and do not break and tear the skin.

To Dress Turkeys.—Observe the same instructions as given for preparing chickens, but always dry pick. Dressed turkeys, when dry picked, always sell best and command better prices than scalded lots, as the appearance is brighter and more attractive. Endeavor to market all old and heavy gobblers before January 1st, as after the holidays the demand is for small fat hen turkeys only, old toms being sold at a discount to canners.

Ducks and Geese.—Should be scalded in the same temperature of water as for other kinds of poultry, but it requires more time for the water to penetrate and loosen the feathers. Some parties advise, after scalding, to wrap them in a blanket for the purpose of steaming, but they must not be left in this condition long enough to cook the flesh. Do not undertake to dry pick geese and ducks just before killing for the purpose of saving the feathers, as it causes the skin to become very much inflamed, and is a great injury to the sale. Do not pick the feathers off the head; leave the feathers on for two or three inches on the neck. Do not singe the bodies for the purpose of removing any down or hair, as the heat from the flame will give them an oily and unsightly appearance. After they are picked clean they should be held in scalding water about ten seconds for the purpose of plumping, and then rinsed off in clean cold water. Fat heavy stock is always preferred.

Before packing and shipping, poultry should be thoroughly dry and cold, but not frozen; the animal heat should be entirely out of the body; pack in boxes or barrels; boxes holding 100 to 200 lbs are preferable, and pack snugly; straighten out the body and legs, so that they will not arrive very much bent and twisted out of shape; fill the packages as full as possible to prevent moving about on the way; barrels answer better for chickens and ducks than for turkeys or geese; when convenient, avoid putting more than one kind in a package, mark kind and weight of each description on the package and mark shipping directions plainly on the cover

How to Dress Capons.—First be sure and not kill them until crops are empty, and that they are fat. A thin capon is not as good as an ordinary chicken, because if not large or a proper capon they are not wanted as capons or chickens either. Leave feathers on neck from head down two-thirds way to the shoulders. Leave feathers on two first joints of wings. Leave feathers on tail and half way up the back. Leave feathers on legs from knee joint two-thirds up the hips. All the rest of the feathers come off. Feathers that are removed should be saved and will sell if kept dry and clean. Be careful and keep the capon clean. Wrap paper around head. Appearances add to the sale and of course price.

SPRAGUE COMMISSION CO.

Stamford Poultry Association.

Stamford, Conn., Oct. 29.—The Stamford Poultry Association was formed last night, at a meeting held in the City court room, and attended by many of the fanciers of this town and vicinity. Several who were not present were heard from by letter, thus indicating their desire to join the new association, and expressed the wish that it might be successful.

The association is organized, its constitution says, for the purpose of promoting more interest in domestic poultry, pigeons and pet stock, as well as to foster a fraternal feeling amongst the fanciers and breeders of the same, and whose object shall be to buy, sell and handle all kinds of poultry, pigeons and pet stock, coop pens, feed and all other material and supplies appertaining to the interest of this association; to give such exhibitions from time to time, and to give and to hold such prizes and gifts as the good of the association shall require.

All the towns in this corner of Connecticut are represented in the association. Every town on the main line of the Consolidated Road between Greenwich and Bridgeport has members in it. That the club will prove a success there seems to be no doubt. Its officers are hustlers and it starts off with 41 charter members.

It is probable that the first annual exhibition of the association will be held in this city next January—Jan. 22 to 24 being the most likely dates. This time is chosen in order that birds exhibited at the New York and Boston shows may be conveniently exhibited here.

For several years the subject of forming a poultry association has been talked of about here. Fanciers of Stamford and neighboring towns have taken prizes at shows in other places. The nearest point in Connecticut at which a poultry exhibition has been held is Danbury, and Danbury is inconvenient of access.

The officers of the new association are: President, Horace Havemeyer; vice-presidents, E. Hope Norton, John Lycett, C. S. Purdy, R. L. Hutchings, W. E. Louden; secretary, N. R. Jessup; treasurer, E. O. Billard; executive committee, Benj. I. Knapp, R. M. Clark, W. C. Hoyt, Russell Hart, A. B. Colgan.

ASTHMA CURE FREE!

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in all Cases.

SENT ABSOLUTELY FREE ON RECEIPT OF POSTAL.

WRITE YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS PLAINLY.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,

REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 150th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

Timid as a Rabbit.

It is not always safe to count on the timidity of a creature that is proverbially timid. Jack, a big white rabbit with pink eyes, was one of these exceptions. Jack was one of the biggest members of his family and when he did not want to be picked up by his long ears he would scold and kick and jerk until it took a firm hold to keep him from getting away. At other times he was as gentle as a kitten. Above everything, Jack hated dogs, and he had a way of charging down upon the biggest of them, which often sent them away howling. When a strange cur came nosing about the place Jack would crouch down in a sulk, with his pink eyes snapping. He would begin to grunt out disapproval, stamping his hindquarters hard on the ground. "Hu-u-u-uh!" he would say spitefully, thumping with his feet. Then, when his anger was worked up, he would lay back his long ears and run in a white streak straight at the prowler. Just before he reached the dog he would spring off the ground and land all four feet into the dog's side No dog ever stood that charge. Doubtless they thought that a rabbit would not do such a courageous thing, and when the rabbit did it they must have thought it some strange animal which they did not know how to fight. Jack could not have hurt them, of course, but he was not afraid to try, and it was just that which won him all his battles. Some dogs in the neighborhood grew so afraid of him that they could not be coaxed to come near him. But Jack got into bad habits and had to be killed. He had all the apples, potatoes, turnips and carrots that he could possibly want to eat, but he was not satisfied, so he began to gnaw the bark from the trees and shrubs on the front lawn. He was whipped for it time and again, but after he had ruined valuable pear trees in the garden he was shot for his disobedience.

Literary Notes.

The Cosmopolitan has endeavored to make itself known by timely contributions to all important controversies. Frank Moss, so well known in the Lexow and Mazet investigations, contributes "Municipal Misgovernment and Corruption: A Warning to Patriots" to the November issue. This considers a serious difficulty in a way that will be found interesting not only to New Yorkers, but to residents of every part of the United States.

"The Man of Mexico" is the striking title of an article on President Diaz which appears in the Magazine Number of The Outlook for November. The writer is Mr. Charles F. Lummis, author of the best book on Mexico, "The Awakening of a Nation." Special pertinence attaches to the publication of this article at the present moment, when the Congress of South American nations and of the United States is beginning its sessions in the City of Mexico in response to President Diaz's invitation. The story of President Diaz's life reads like a novel. His personal bravery in battle and his narrow escapes from his enemies form an extraordinary tale of conflict and success. ($3 a year.

Following the precedent of almost thirty Thanksgiving Days, Horace Vose, of Westerly, Rhode Island, will send the prize turkey of all his flocks to grace the new President's dinner table on November 28. "When Mr. Vose began the custom of sending a turkey to the President," writes a contributor to the November Ladies' Home Journal, "he had no motive other than the desire to send a Thanksgiving bird to the man who writes the Thanksgiving proclamations. The pioneer turkey went to President Grant in 1873. It weighed thirty-six pounds and elicited the first of the courteous notes that have been coming ever since in acknowledgment from the Executive Mansion. Mr. Vose has been dubbed 'The Turkey King.' All through the summer and fall he makes occasional visits to the farms in the vicinity, keeping a watchful eye on the many flocks and eagerly scanning the strutting companies for the coming champion, the distinguished member of all the feathery tribes that is to rise eventually to the dignity of a place on the White House dinner table."

Fitchburg, Mass., Poultry Show.

The Fitchburg, Mass., poultry show will be held December 31st to January 3d. A new plan for the payment of premiums was adopted at the last meeting, so that there will be much more cash divided among the exhibitors. The more single birds of a class entered, and the largest amount and greatest number of premiums will be awarded. Entry fee 50 cents per bird with pen fee at $1. Send to J. Lee Frost, Secretary, for premium list. Premiums are offered on basis of number of entries as follows: Twenty entries in a class, 1st, $1.50; 2d, $1.25; 3d, $1.00; 4th, .75c; 5th, .50c. Sixteen entries in a class, 1st, $1.50; 2d, $1.00; 3d, .75c; 4th, .50c; 5th, .25c. Twelve entries in a class, 1st, $1.25; 2d, $1.00; 3d, 50c; 4th, 25c. To Members of the American Poultry Association and Everyone Interested in Standard Bred Poultry.

The committee on editing the American Standard of Perfection desire the earnest cooperation of everyone interested in the advancement of the poultry industry, whether you are breeding extensively or keeping only a few fancy fowls for pleasure. You surely realize the importance of breeding to a correct standard.

The American Poultry Association is putting forth every effort to perfect the work that guides the selection of breeds to fancy and practical requirements. The Editorial Committee urges immediate assistance before another issue of the Standard is edited.

Make suggestions as to desired changes. Call attention to omissions and point out errors, typographical or otherwise.

Please study over carefully that part of the standard governing the breed in which you are most interested and send suggestions to the committee at your earliest convenience, as the report of the committee must be mailed to members of the A. P. A. sixty days prior to the date of the Annual Meeting at Charleston, S. C., Jan. 23-31, 1902, where it will be acted upon.

Faithfully Yours,

Correction.

Editor American Fancier: We beg leave to assert that the second prize cockerel at the Pan-American Exposition in the Black Minorca class was bred and owned by us instead of Mr. Hilldorfer, as you have published.

White Cochin Bantam Lost.

Editor American Fancier: Will you please mention through the American Fancier that we did not get our White Cochin Bantam hen, pen number 2293, from the Pan-American, but instead had another one sent us. We are very anxious to have our own bird. and if anyone has received a hen not belonging to them we would be glad to hear from them. We could pick out our hen from among a hundred by several distinguishing marks.

PIGEONS.

Pan-American Pigeon Show.

The Pan-American show will go down in American pigeon history as the greatest gathering of pigeons and pigeon fanciers that has happened in America to date and a mark for quality and numbers has been set that will take some beating. While the buildings in which they were penned were not as good as could be desired, there was but one day that any risk from the weather could have done any damage. There were the best birds from Canada, the Far West, South and East in competition, and while some sections did not do quite as well as others they all got a bite. The strongest classes were Tumblers, as usual, and there was plenty of work for the different judges in all classes, especially as the edict went forth that there were to be eight awards in each class when there were sufficient entries to make them. The result was about twice as much judging to do as has been the custom heretofore when but four and five ribbons have been given. All judging was completed Wednesday and we heard as little grumbling as we ever have at the awards. Every man who wanted his prize money got it before leaving Buffalo and all judges were paid in full, and ribbons are to be sent out to those who won them. This is about as slick as anyone could wish for and was fully appreciated by the exhibitors and judges. Too much praise cannot be given to Supt. Twombly, for every promise was carried out to the letter, and we are all willing to vote Superintendent of Live Stock Converse (under whose department the pigeon show came) the right man in the right place, and should he ever hold a similar position he can bank on the pigeon section to a man.

Another feature that surpasses anything ever in this country was the large number of visiting fanciers, there being no less than one hundred pigeon men present of a national reputation, and it will be a pleasant recollection to most of the boys for years to come.

Aside from Tumblers, there were really no very weak classes, Dragoons, Homers (both Show and Working), Fantails, Jacobins, Owls, Turbits, Oriental Frills, and German Toys showing up in remarkable numbers.

Mr. H. D. Kirkover, Jr., was there for a part of the week looking O. K. again. Messrs. Austin and Jenner, of Detroit, put in the week, as did the Messrs. Brown Bros., of Erie, Pa., while from Cincinnati came George Ewald and his friend, Mr. Wright. Milwaukee had Mr. Jansen as its representative, while New York had H. V. Crawford, A. W. Hall and "Billy" Stanton. Philadelphia was there in the persons of William Ehinger and George Spohn; Baltimore, Henry Tiemann and Dr. Meyer. Mr. Robinson, the artist, of St. Louis, was also present; also Dr. Magpie Gibson, of Michigan. Then came Boston headed by Supt. Twombly, "Joe" Gavin, R. D. Craft, F. L. Weston, George Feather, Eustis, Smith, Dutra and the writer. Among the visitors from the smaller cities were George Eckert, Alex. Ingram, F. M. Gilbert, W. & J. Kennedy, of Owl fame, J. Glasgow, known as a Fan crank, and many others. Toronto, Canada, was represented by H. B. Donovan, Chas. Wagner, and Dr. Bell, superintendent of the pigeon section of the Toronto Exposition, all of whom we were glad to meet again.

The American people want fresh eggs the year round and are willing to pay you handsomely for them. Your hens will help supply the demand (at a good, round profit,) if you help them with a

Stearns Bone Cutter.

It will double your egg yield, insure fertile eggs for hatching, makes chicks and broilers grow. It reduces bone to a granular meal, free from splinters and chunks. Our "How To Make Poultry Pay" is the title of a book which tells the whole story. Let us send you a free copy.

The New Model Number Seven is a ball-bearing, easy-running, rapid-cutting machine, cutting all meat and gristle, as well as dry or green bone. Ball-bearing makes it easy; the gear makes it powerful. Entirely automatic and self-regulating. Eight other sizes for hand or power.

The Stud Buck.

Editor American Fancier: The most important member of the rabbitry is the stud buck. He exerts an influence on all of the young, while the does exert an influence upon only their own litters. Without desiring to detract from the importance of having good does, it is certainly indispensable that the stud buck should be a good one. It has been said in poultry literature that "the cock is half of the pen," and it is just as true that the stud buck is half of the herd. But neither statement is absolutely true—the cock may be more or less than half of the pen and the stud buck may be more or less than half of the herd. If the buck is prepotent, that is, if he is able to stamp his qualities more certainly upon the young than the does can, then he is more than half the herd, measured by the influence he exerts in breeding. If, on the other hand, the does are more prepotent than the buck, then he is less than half the herd.

If one had supremely excellent does and the buck was but a moderately fine specimen, it would be to the advantage of the breeder to have the does rather than the buck prepotent. But as it is more difficult to obtain from five to ten does of supreme excellence than it is to obtain one buck of such a character, as a rule it is advantageous to have the stud buck a prepotent animal.

Prepotency is a quality that cannot always be accounted for, but generally speaking I believe it is the result of a long line of ancestors having qualities similar to, if not identical with, those possessed by the individual specimen. If a buck possesses certain definite qualities, and if his ancestors for a number of generations have possessed similar qualities, the chance of his being prepotent and so of being capable of transmitting his qualities to the young he may beget arises to the degree of a high probability. But the final test of prepotency, after all, is in actual breeding.

One of my stud bucks seems to be quite strongly possessed of this power. The young which he has begotten, so far as one can determine from the young, seem to be very uniform in quality and to resemble him more than they do their dams. But it is too early yet to fully determine this question, as none of his young are yet mature. Young Belgians change a good deal during development, and a conclusion based upon the appearance of the young is premature. But this buck possesses qualities similar to those possessed by many of his ancestors, and so, while a conclusion from the young might be premature, the probabilities from his breeding inheritance favor prepotency.

Prepotency may be in most cases but little, if anything, more than the working of the law of reversion or atavism. If the ancestors are like their descendant, so many of his descendants as revert to the characteristics of his ancestors will be like him, and this reversion we may mistake, if it be a mistake, for prepotency. There are cases, however, of prepotency where a male stamps his image upon the young he begets with remarkable fidelity, and yet we are unable to point out the ancestors whose image he has inherited. This is sometimes due to an imperfect knowledge of the pedigree and sometimes is due to we know not what. If atavism be the secret of prepotency, in some cases it works with great regularity over considerable stretches of time, skipping several of the generations known to us to reach some unknown ancestor. This is, of course, possible, and that at once lands us in an inexplicable difficulty in our attempt to explain the cause of prepotency.

However it may be produced, prepotency is an excellent quality in a stud buck, provided he himself is of the right stamp.

The stud buck should be brimming over with quality. He should be strong in color. In reds the under-color cannot be too deep or rich. If his ears are properly laced, the amount of ticking is a matter of minor importance, provided always that it is not too abundant. Heavily ticked red bucks have a tendency to produce too much black in the young, sometimes producing solid black youngsters, but more frequently producing greys and smudgy reds. Better have too little than too much ticking in the buck. He should have a reasonably fine head, but not too fine, for masculine quality is not associated, as a rule, with too refined heads. His body should be of good length, the ribs well sprung. The back should be nicely but not too sharply arched. The hindquarters should be full, well muscled and heavy, with hind legs to match. The forelegs should be straight, moderately fine in bone, and yet substantial enough to support the forequarters and hold the feet straight. We want no bulldog, out at the elbows, forelegs, and none that are crooked, like a Basset hound. And we want, when we can get it, four solid red feet. It is difficult to get the hind feet as good in color as the fore feet, but the closer the approximation to this the better. And with all we want an active animal, every movement showing life and vigor, and the eye bright, clear and vivacious.

The breeder who has a stud buck which will meet all of these requirements, especially if he is prepotent, has a valuable factor in building up a fine strain.

I have purposely omitted till now the size of the buck. While I like a large buck to look at, if the does are of good size a medium sized buck will answer the purpose. Size, I believe, is more dependent upon the doe than upon the buck, and I should never hesitate to use a medium sized buck, if in other respects he was what I required, with does of good size. Indeed I imagine that such a buck will beget as large, or nearly as large, young as a very large one would. Of course, as between two bucks of equal quality and breeding, the larger one would be preferred; but as between two, one much better in other respects but only moderate in size, and the other inferior in everything but size, although considerably larger, the medium sized buck should be selected for breeding fine specimens. If one is going in for size only he would better choose a Flemish Giant, as then he would obtain the size with the greatest certainty.

Finally, if one has a buck which is producing young of the stamp he desires, he will be very foolish to change him for an uncertainty. No matter how fine another buck may appear to be, the buck is valuable to you for the young he begets. If the young are just what you desire, by making a change you substitute uncertainty for certainty, which is not a course approved of by wisdom. If you will do this, do it by degrees, that is, breed but a single doe to the new buck and note what he begets. If the experiment proves satisfactory, you can then try it safely on a larger scale. Stick by the old buck until you know that the new is an improvement and will give better results.

A BILL OF FARE

at any first-class hotel or restaurant includes chicken in some form. It is a task for caterers to get nice plump poultry, especially during the early fall. Most flocks are well fed, but lice and mites are allowed free course in the coops and on the birds and this will prevent the hens from laying and the chickens from growing more than any other one thing in the business. This is where Lambert's Death to Lice Remedies come in.

A FALL FAIR is a good place to show the product of your skill at poultry raising. The competition is such that no lousy, skinny birds stand a ghost of a show in winning any of the best prizes. You can use Lambert's Death to Lice Powder on your birds while they are in the show coops, but to get most benefit from this remedy it should be used for weeks before showing.

THE REGULAR FARE of every well kept poultry yard includes all the necessities for growth, fattening and the production of eggs. You can feed everything under the sun, and house the flocks in gilt-edged palaces, and still you will need to treat them for lice or they will continually harbor vermin. Grain is now too high in price to feed a lot of lice. You can save the cost of many a box of Lambert's Death to Lice on your feed bills by using it often and liberally.

A FAIR OFFER: We put up four remedies for poultry vermin to cover all the demands in this line. We sell in all sizes of package from 10c each upwards, and send samples postpaid for this price in everything but "Liquid" which is not mailable. We agree to return the money if not satisfactory in every way. We send a 64-page book by mail free to everyone sending their address. If you are in a hurry send 10c. at same time stating what kind of lice you desire to knock out and we will mail trial package. 73-34

By Using a Globe Incubator Many Men and Women Add $500 a Year to their Income.

Easy Work and Little Expense.

Any man or woman can raise chickens successfully with a Globe Incubator, and there is a lot of money to be made all the year round by the small as well as the large chicken-raiser. There is always a good cash market for chickens, and the Globe Incubator hatches out healthier, stronger chicks and more of them to the 100 eggs than any other incubator on the market. It is so simple to operate and regulate that any person can handle it successfully, and to day hundreds of men and women, business men, preachers, teachers, mechanics, railroad men, clerks and day laborers as well as farmers and farmers' wives are adding a snug sum to their annual income with chicken-money and without any cash outlay to speak of. There are to day many of the large chicken-raisers who number their profits by the thousands of dollars and occupy whole farms with their chicken-houses and yards who started with one Globe Incubator and it did the rest. Leisure hours with the Globe will produce chickens for family use and net a nice sum of pocket-money besides, every year. Write C. C. Shoemaker, Box 440, Freeport, Ill., to day and he will send you his price list and catalogue of Globe Incubators and tell you free how you can add $500 or more to your annual income in an easy, pleasant manner and not require much cash to start. 26-38

Nothing Under the Sun Will Make Hens Lay

And keep them in healthy condition all the year round Like BANNER EGG FOOD AND TONIC.

It starts the pullets laying, and will keep them at it all through the winter, when eggs are very scarce.

We are having our SIXTH ANNUAL SALE during NOVEMBER and have some special inducements to offer those who have never tried it, as well as old customers, who know a good thing when they see it.

During this sale we will sell a 1 lb box for 15c; or 7 1 lb boxes for $1. The regular price is, 1 lb box 25c; or 5 1 lb boxes, $1, so it will be to your advantage to order this at the reduced price. In addition to the reduction in price, we will give with each order for 7 1 lb boxes, one of KUHN'S EGG RECORD AND ACCOUNT BOOKS, which retail at 25c. each, or to those who order $2 worth. or 14 1 lb boxes. we will give a book, which every poultryman needs, entitled "LITTLE CHICKS," which retails for 50c. each. It contains special articles by M. K. BOYER, P H. JACOBS, G. W. NONES, W. W. KULP, A. G. DUSTON, A. F. COOPER, M. V. NORYS, and other well known poultrymen. The information it contains is worth $100 00 to any breeder.

Remember these special prices and offers are for the month of NOVEMBER ONLY and no orders will be filled after NOVEMBER 30TH, at the above reduced prices.

Send your orders in at once. and we will fill orders as soon as received.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15, one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

From the Editor's Perch.

We did not publish the winnings of our advertisers only at the Pan-American. The reason is: The second part of the hyphenated exposition is American, so we published the winnings of every American and every Canadian, whether they were "wid us or agin us." Americans believe in fair play and so does the American Fancier and so do its friends in the States and the Old Dominion of Canada.

We are indebted to Mr. Harry F. Hess, Cobleskill, N. Y., for a photograph of five homing pigeons selected from his Iroquois Loft. We have no hesitation in stating that it is a beautiful picture, the best we have ever seen of its kind, and the photographer (Mr. Hess) is to be congratulated on producing such an artistic study in Homers.

For the benefit of a few more or less esteemed contemporaries whose November issues expressed the wish that the Pan-American poultry show would prove a success, we will state that the aforesaid show occurred October 21 to 28 and did prove a success.

The premium list of the Keystone Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association of Philadelphia, Pa., is at hand. As usual, it is replete with handsome cash specials and silver cups, which amount to $2,300. The latter amount is a record breaker and should bring out big entries, and it no doubt will in the favored classes.

In looking over the list we find Light Brahmas honored with $22 in specials, Dark Brahmas with nil, Buff Cochins with $13, Partridge Cochins with $26. White and Black Cochins receive nothing, Black Langshans receive $9 in specials. This ends the Asiatic class.

The American classes are well provided for. Barred Plymouth Rocks, in addition to the American Plymouth Rock Club prizes for members, including a $50 silver cup, get a silver cup special and $71 in cash from the association in cash specials. White Rocks receive $25 and Buff Rocks the same amount.

But Wyandottes are the particular favorites. The National Wyandotte Club of America gives $290 in cash in specials, of which $130 go to the Whites, $85 to the Buffs, $30 to the Silvers, $20 to the Goldens, $15 to the Partridge, and $10 to the Silver Pencilled varieties. In addition to this the White Wyandottes receive a handsome silver cup from the North American, a $30 set of Dresden plates, several other cups and specials and cash from the society and its friends amounting to $110. The Eastern White Wyandotte Club also offers $15 in specials. This beats all records on cash prizes offered on any one breed, but when it is considered that Mr. Cheston, the secretary of the Philadelphia show and president of the National Wyandotte Club, is also an enthusiastic breeder of White Wyandottes the apportionment can be readily understood. The association further gives $54 to Buff Wyandottes, $15 to Silver Wyandottes, and $15 to Golden Wyandottes. The Silver Wyandotte Club offer $10 also.

Leghorns do not fare so well, $20 in cash each on Browns and Whites and $11 on Buffs being the sum total, except several silver cups offered by the American Leghorn Club.

Black Minorcas have a splendid lot of specials allotted them by the American Black Minorca Club and a pool of $68 given by the Keystone Association.

Andalusians receive $5, Spanish nothing, Polish $15, Hamburgs $20, Houdans $14, Games and Indian Games $25, Rhode Island Reds $55, Ducks $30, Turkeys $12, Geese $15, Game Bantams $18, and Bantams Other than Game $46.

We publish the above for the benefit of intending exhibitors. Premium lists can be obtained by addressing Mr. James Cheston, Jr., Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, Pa. Entries close December 12.

Mr. C. H. Rhodes, Topeka, Kansas, has been engaged to lecture on poultry and give instructions on judging before the poultry class at the Kansas State Agricultural College, Manhattan, Kas., February 17 to 22, 1902. Judge Rhodes is a practical and successful poultry raiser and fancier and a most thorough judge of fowls. We congratulate the college in selecting such a man instead of some of the feathered aeronauts, whose chief qualification is "hot air," but who manage to creep in at such functions quite frequently.

In justice to Mr. John Glasgow, we will state that the omission of any comments on his part on the Brown Red Game classes was no fault of his, as he emphatically declined to make any remarks on classes in which he was interested. It is, however, in order to state here that these classes were the best ever seen at an American show, both males and females being exceptionally strong, with rather hot competition, as might be expected when Messrs. Crowe, Barber, Blunck, Sites and Glasgow get in the same ring.

We regret to read the unkind remarks of some of our contemporaries regarding the Pan-American poultry exhibit. As these were written at a distance ranging anywhere from 200 to 800 miles, it is best to be charitable and express regrets that the various editors and publishers were unable to be present.

In contrast to the rather limited range taken by a few of our American contemporaries, permit us to extend the most hearty congratulations to the Canadian Poultry Review. Editor Donovan's report of the Pan was a true and good piece of fanciers' journalism. It breathed the spirit that prevailed among the exhibitors present at the "big show."

We take pleasure in reprinting the following criticism on the A. P. A. which appeared in the November issue of the Poultry Monthly:

"Were it not for a sense of duty to our readers, we would feel constrained to say that never again would we mention the American Poultry Association in our columns. It is always more pleasant to commend than to condemn, but we do not hesitate to do the latter when it seems necessary. It does seem, however, that something must be wrong with an organization that needs so much defending by some of its members. One more thing it seems to need is a press agent, or some one to send out news of its doings. If it is a National organization, its transactions should be of interest to all poultrymen and should be put before them through all available channels. The next meeting of the A. P. A. is to be in Charleston, as we learn from some apparently specially favored poultry papers, but we have received no official notification of the fact and other papers are in the same boat. Several weeks ago the new Standards were ready for distribution, as we learned indirectly, but we could get no direct information on the subject, though we had long-standing orders for a goodly number. Possibly the mails are at fault—possibly ! !"

Our esteemed and honorable contemporary is justified in making the above criticism except where it intimates that specially favored poultry papers received the news of the selection of Charleston as the next meeting place of the society. We beg to differ. Being one of the favored(?) ones, it is not out of place to state that we spent quite a little time, if not money, in telegraphing to headquarters to find out how the vote stood. Through the kindness of President Kimmey, we finally obtained the result of the election at our own expense and published as a matter of news. This was weeks ago, and the columns of the monthly papers were welcome to the news, if desired.

Mr. George G. Brown, proprietor of Roycroft Farm, Cleveland, Ohio, purchased fifth prize White Wyandotte pullet at the Pan at a long price. This bird won the Club special for the whitest female White Wyandotte, over eighty in competition. Mr Brown's second prize cock was awarded the Club prize for the Whitest male in the White Wyandotte class and he writes us that the latter will be mated with his recent purchase, his 4th prize pullet and two others equally as good, so he expects to have something good in shape and color next fall. He also desires us to state that J. A. Warren is no longer manager of the poultry department of Roycroft Farm.

We learn that the Cleveland Poultry and Cat Show is simply booming, and birds are coming from Canada, Massachusetts, Maryland, New York, Michigan, Wisconsin and all parts of the country. Good up-to-date management is bound to tell.

Mr. John Glasgow writes: "We (Mountainside Lofts) have sent eleven Fantails and a Birchen Game Bantam cockerel and pullet to the Crystal Palace Show, England, just to see how they do up against the English cracks. It is a big handicap though in sending Fantails or chicks so far." As the Palace show is on this week, the fate of the only American entries is anxiously awaited. We hope to report favorably on the result in our next issue.

Mr. M. B. Megargee, Modena, Pa., writes the following which we gladly publish: "When my birds arrived home from Buffalo they were in Dr. Dorsey's coop which I immediately returned to him, and I received a letter from him stating that he did not receive mine. Now the question is who did receive mine? He has not been gentleman enough to return it, although he could not help knowing that it was my coop as my name and address was printed in large stencil letters on the front. Will you be kind enough to insert an advertisement in your editorial columns asking if the gentleman that received my coop is not fancier enough to return the same home ?"

"Deacon" George O. Brown, agricultural editor of the Baltimore Sun, found the following squib in some exchange:

"William Brigham, of Chardon, Ohio, is the owner of a gander goose more than 100 years old that is as lively today as the large flock of youngsters which he proudly leads about Mr. Brigham's farmyard. The bird was brought to this country by Mr. Brigham's father nearly a century ago from the East, and has been in the family's possession ever since. There are many accounts of the old fellow's sagacity in eluding foxes and other enemies, and he was the playfellow of many of the old men of the township when they were boys years ago. The goose was exhibited at the recent Geauga centennial celebration at Burton, where he attracted a great deal of attention."

It will now be in order for some enterprising Yankee to trace the at present doubtful origin of the Barred Plymouth Rock to the Pilgrim Fathers and not allow the Sage of Natick, Mr. I. K. Felch, to monopolize the early advent of the breed as found in the "Essex strain."

We, however, deem Mr. Felch's contribution in Farm-Poultry to the Barred Plymouth Rock literature so interesting that we republish it in these columns.

Mr. J. P. W. Marx, the clever and always interesting writer on poultry topics in our esteemed English contemporary, The Feathered World, in commenting on what he saw at the recent Dairy Show, makes mention of the following:

"If the fashionable markings of the Barred Rock and Dark Brahma pullets continue in its present direction some new words will have to be invented to describe them. I should describe the general tone of the coloring of the winners in these classes as a combination of white and black. I feel pretty safe about the black, because the brown tinge is now very much less than heretofore. The white is bad to describe. Fanciers of both breeds declare it is a silvery grey; to me it seems too light and keen to be a grey. but maybe I am wrong, for when I turn to the lightest ground colored Andalusian I could find her light blue grey did not appear at all the same shade, and I again thought black and white was the best verbal description. Unfortunately, the Silver Wyandotte pullets were penned close by, and they surely are black and white, but utterly different in shade from the Brahmas and Rocks, so the same words would not do to describe all of them, and I felt a little mixed. Probably the description in the Standard is as near as you can get it, with the variation, to my mind, that the pencilling of the Brahma and the barring of the Rock is getting sharper, or perhaps a better description would be, more vivid, the effect being that the pullets are more decided in general appearance, with less of that soft, almost misty, coloring about them."

We would respectfully commend the above hesitation to find in words an absolute satisfactory description of what constitutes the real tint of the ground color of a Barred Plymouth Rock or Dark Brahma female. This has been a bone of contention on this side of the "big pond," and we are still in doubt as to what is proper. The pearl white recommended by B. N. Pierce and Theo. Hewes at the revision of the Standard at Fishers Island in 1897 did not meet with the approval of many of the Barred Rock breeders at the Boston meeting of 1898, and the present wording, "Bluish grey, barred with narrow lines of a dark blue that stop short of a positive black," was substituted. This seems to give the nearest approach to the correct color we can find.

As to Dark Brahma females, the blending of the ground color with the pencilling should produce a steel grey, and that can be obtained by a ground color with pencilling of a positive black. The fault with many Dark Brahma females is too much brown in the pencilling, due to breeding from badly colored males and females. The fine steel colored females produced years ago by the veteran, Newton Adams, are still fresh in the memories of fanciers who admire this handsome fowl. The fact that many breeders of the latter chopped the heads off white breasted pullets because they looked like culls, when these same birds would have moulted into beautifully pencilled hens. This, added to the fact that males with bronze red color in the wings were used, did much to destroy the color of the Dark Brahma female.

Of the Silver Wyandottes at the Dairy, Mr. Marx writes:

"I could not find a Silver Wyandotte cockerel with a clear white back and saddle hackle. If I mistake not, one or two cockerels of the past were very nearly so. The pure white in the top coloring seems difficult to find and quite as difficult to retain. I am afraid all the Silver cockerels would have suffered severely if judged Standard in hand. Indeed, set aside a few birds, and the Wyandottes as a section seemed to have lost size and type, particularly the pullets."

Granting the loss of color in the males, we are somewhat skeptical regarding the statement that Wyandottes in England have "lost size and type." The English birds we have seen in this country had plenty of size, but all failed in type, being too long and straight in back. Whether they have gained or lost in this respect, Mr. Marx's comments do not enlighten us.

Mr. Marx winds up his article in the Feathered World with the following timely and practical remarks:

"A seasonable hint, by way of reminder, is to put in order your houses, runs, or whatever other arrangements you may have to make for the breeding season. Give the houses a dressing of lime wash, with which a strong dash of common carbolic acid has been mixed, make the roof and sides sound, and put the doors and ventilators in working order. A covering of tarred felt all round the house will very materially help to make it warm. At the same time remember that warmth without proper ventilation is infinitely more injurious than a cold house with pure air; therefore, when making up every crack and hole (as very properly they should be made up), be mindful to plan some ventilating holes in or near the roof. The position of the perches should be such that the fowls roost as much as practicable out of any draught; if one perch be higher than another, although it may be only a few inches, the higher one will be crowded and the lower one empty. The obvious remedy is to place all of them on the same level and not too high, say two feet, or even less, from the ground. That day shelter I have lately so often recommended, which provides a dry shelter in the daytime, catching all the sunshine and light possible, will at this season be of great use. This shed may be so arranged that it stands close up to the house so that the fowls can go into it early in the morning. If a wire-covered front be fixed to it they can be confined until feeding time, or even all day in wet weather. This is of some advantage during these damp, raw mornings, particularly while the fowls are in rough feather, since dryness is very helpful to the bursting of the sheath of the fast-growing new feathers."

"Most fowl keepers have noticed that moulting fowls eat very little. This is generally during the shrinking-up stage, while the feathers are drying up and dropping off. Then there comes the time when the fowl, descriptively speaking, is all quills, and at this time, too, the fowl is very sorry for herself and seems much too woebegone to think about eating. If an unfortunate bird in this state comes in for a thorough wetting she may go the wrong way. Let anyone who is curious put such a fowl in a dry, clean show pen and in the morning the floor will be covered with fine white dust, tiny pieces of the bursted sheaths of the growing feathers. In a few days, particularly if kept dry, the new feathers have fairly clothed the skin and the appetite begins to revive. Now your fowl may be fed with strong stimulating food and just sufficient sulphate of iron added to the drinking water (which must be contained in an earthenware vessel) to give it a tinge of rust. If too much of the iron be added the fowls will not drink it. At this time, too, fresh vegetable food is greatly enjoyed and is very beneficial indeed."

Show at Auburn, N. Y.

Editor American Fancier: It is with pleasure that we make our first annual announcement that, commencing Jan. 28th, the Cayuga County Poultry and Pet Stock Association will open its first annual exhibit to the public.

We enter upon our labors in behalf of pure bred poultry, pigeons and pet stock with a bright and promising future before us. We shall pay all obligations assumed and feel warranted in making extra efforts to induce breeders and fanciers to visit our show, January 28th to 31st, 1902. We shall make extra inducements in the way of cash and special premiums that should attract a large list of exhibitors, and birds may be sent to this show with the assurance that they will be carefully and properly handled.

The association will issue its premium list about December 1st. This show is an assured success in every way, and we invite all persons interested to co-operate with us in making this the banner show of Central New York.

Poultry Institute Association Meeting at Rome, N. Y.

A meeting of the Poultry Institute Association will be held in connection with the exhibition of the Rome Poultry and Pet Stock Association, November 25 to 29. The meeting will be conducted by James E. Rice and will afford all who are interested in the breeding of poultry an opportunity of acquiring the most valuable and authentic information, saving valuable time and costly experiments. The following speakers, each an eminent authority, have been engaged for the occasion:

"Breeding and Feeding," by James E. Rice, of Yorktown, N. Y.

"Breeding from the Fancier's Standpoint," accompanied by his famous illustrated lecture, by T. F. McGrew, New York City.

"Incubating and Brooding and the Rearing of Turkeys, Ducks and Geese," by Dr. A. A. Brigham, of Cornell.

"Institute Work in this State and the Judging of Fancy Poultry," by Morris Davenport, Dryden, N. Y.

"Sanitation as a Prevention of Disease and Poultry Buildings," by Dr. E. M. Santee, Cortland, N. Y.

"Poultry Raising from a Woman's Standpoint," by Mrs. George E. Monroe, Dryden, N. Y.

A prominent feature will be the Question Box and its answers by the instructors and members. Think up some of those knotty problems that you have often wished answered and bring them with you.

The expense of this meeting is borne by the state and all are cordially invited to attend the meetings, which are free, and will furnish more practical information than can be acquired by years of costly experience.

Editor American Fancier: I notice in your Pan-American Number you report 4th Black Minorca cock to Key, which should be Frey. Kindly correct in your next issue. WM. C. FREY.

Editor American Fancier: I see in your issue of American Fancier for November 2d, in placing the awards in the Black Red Game class you give Brooks & Hoffmann 4th place on hens instead of 3rd. Following is the correct places received by said firm at the Pan-American show: 2d, 4th and 7th cocks, 3d hen, and 1st on cockerels. Please correct this in your next issue.

Dr. Witmer's Cochin Bantam Lost or Stolen.

Editor American Fancier: We have written to all the gentlemen having White Cochin Bantams—at the Pan-American—inquiring about our lost hen, and have had replies from all stating that they have none but their own, and we are convinced by this time that the exchange was intentional, and not a mistake. The hen as received in exchange is a very poor one, with entirely bare middle toe feathering and but ordinary in Cochin shape. We would never think of paying an entrance fee on such a one, knowing that she is disqualified, and therefore would not stand a ghost of a chanc to win. We would be very thankful to any one who visited the Pan, and who examined the White Cochin Bantam exhibit, if such a one as we received was noticed.

A Cock Fight.

Over at St. Ninian's, before he came to Kilsyth, Dr. Cross won a cock fight. A blacksmith near his father's house kept game cocks, and was a loud man in bragging of their prowess. He had one in particular, a matchless bird, that had never been conquered in any cock-pit between Stirling and Glasgow. The doctor mocked at him and said: "I have a Bantam that will lick your champion any day you like to bring it round." "To-morrow," said the angry smith. Next day, before the set hour, the doctor covered the hackle feathers of the Bantam thickly over with strong mustard. The smith arrived with his conquering hero. It got a nebful of mustard at the first onset, and fled screaming. "That a game cock," said the doctor to the speechless smith. "I don't believe it's a cock at all—it's a hen."—English Exchange.

Plymouth Rock History.

As to the Plymouth Rock muddle. It is somewhat amusing to old heads to see scribes who have been born since the Plymouth Rocks were born and on the market, striving to "correct the records."

I defy any living-man to show in print or cite a single well proved discussion upon the origin of the modern Plymouth Rock until subsequent to the act of D. A. Upham's placing on exhibition at Worcester, Mass., in 1869, the trio of birds as Plymouth Rocks.

This trio sold to Mr. Loring, who in turn placed these birds for 1870 in the hands of Uncle Mark Pitman to breed; and, in turn, in October, 1876, I purchased with his entire flock of Plymouth Rocks and his entire flock of Buff Cochins of Uncle Mark Pitman the Plymouth Rocks I subsequently named "the Essex strain," after amalgamating the blood with that of the Drake blood, so-called, and the blood of the Rocks bred by Gray, of Walpole, Mass., and under the above head and strains I advertised them, and I defy anyone to show the term, "Essex Plymouth Rock," until after I so advertised them.

Now comes Mr. Smith and claims that Mr. Pitman bought the trio and sold it to Mr Loring. But how was it that I bought the progeny of the flocks of Mr. Pitman? Guess the riddle, reader. I defy any writer to show positive proof that there was any concerted action or specific act to produce this American product—not until Mr. Upham sprung the phenomenal trio upon the poultry world.

Then there was the same hustle that has followed every other new breed that has followed them, and a still hunt among the farmers' flocks for birds that resembled the Upham birds, and a record of such breeding; the result being the following, which has stood for twenty-five years undisputed until most men have forgotten the circumstances, when, to-day, other origin for the race is claimed.

At that time the following different crosses were chronicled, and to Mr. Upham alone is due the credit of the hustle and records thus disclosed:

1.—Black Spanish, then so-called, bred upon White Cochins and top crossed by the Single Comb Dominique.
2.—Black Spanish males with Gray Dorking females, top crossed by Dominique. (This was called the Gray strain.)
3.—Dominique on Buff Cochin, and inbred. (The Cochins then called Shanghais.)
4.—White Birmingham on Black Java, top crossed by Dominique.
5.—White Birmingham with Black Java, the Barred female specimens of the cross bred to the males of the product of No. 4.

Note 1.—The Black Spanish in these crosses were called "Minorca Spanish," with red faces, white ears, and much smaller combs than the present Spanish and Minorcas.

Note 2.—The Black Javas were of Asiatic origin, legs indifferently feathered, with black shanks and yellow bottoms to the feet. Isolated specimens were smooth shanked.

It will be seen that Asiatic blood was known to enter into all the families discovered, except that of the Gray or Colored Dorking, which was supposed to be the origin of the Rocks bred by Gray, of Walpole; for in that family would come pullets with light salmon colored breasts barred with gray. See the significance of what I write in the record of the hen, "Graybreast, No. 5747," in the American Poultry Book for 1878, she being by Col. Gray, dam Lady Pitman, 1st.

Now, subsequent to the above families came what was called the Drake strain. Mr. Drake introduced Dark Brahma blood. At the time it was a well known fact that his phenomenal trio that won in Boston, Worcester, Northampton, Springfield—never beaten, was the result of Plymouth Rock male upon Dark Brahma females. It was true of this strain that many pullets came coal black. Four of these black pullets came into possession of P. Williams, Taunton, Mass., at Mr. Drake's death.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,
Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.
NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,
Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.
After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,
REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.
Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 150th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.
Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

What is now known as the Black Java was not acknowledged in our Standard until 1883, when under that name was swallowed up all the Black progeny of the Plymouth Rocks. And so we have the fact that Plymouth Rocks are among the ancestors of our modern Black Javas, they reverting to the color of the Javas of 1856 to 1873, which were among the early ancestors of the Rocks, and one of the prime factors in their making.

I note that in Mr. Smith's ingenious article, his main point seems to be to strive to eliminate all Black Java blood from the Rocks both by scarcity of them and other effort.

Now about those Javas that did go into the make up of the original Plymouth Rocks. In 1855, a tailor by the name of Matterson an Englishman, brought the first to Natick. For years Simon Mulligan, of Natick, bred them, and was breeding them when in 1875 they were forced into the Standard as Black Cochins. Mr. Perkins, of Salem, had hundreds of them in 1856, and all along subsequently. There would be specimens having mahogany feathers in the hackle and mahogany rose of wing in some of the males. Note the significance of this as influencing the prevailing disqualifications for red and brassy feathers in hackles and saddles in the male Rocks. For years did they come by them legitimately by this ancestral influence.

But these early Javas lost their identity in 1875, by being called Black Cochins in our Standard, thus forcing a greater growth of plumage upon shanks and feet.

The first year's (1877) breeding of Plymouth Rocks on the H. B. May place were the best three males and eight females selected from the purchase of Mark Pitman. But the seasons of 1878 and 1879 was when we amalgamated the blood of the Pitman, Drake and Gray Rocks and completed and named the strain Essex Plymouth Rock. These Gray bred Rocks were bred by a Brewster French, in Natick. In the spring of 1878 I took from the French coops the male I named "Col. Gray;" mated him to Lady Pitman, 1st, producing the hen, "Graybreast, 5747;" taking back to the French farm a son of "Mark Pitman," to convert the Gray blood there to Pitman, or "Essex" blood. Understand this was the group having the Gray Dorking cross in them. This same spring I purchased the Drake blood of Sheriff Ray, of Greenfield, Mass., three males and nine females. These females, entered as "Lady Greenfield," were bred to "Prince of Middlesex, 5748," he being by Mark Pitman, Jr., 5745; while I mated a group of the sisters of "Mark Pitman, Jr.," to brothers of the Lady Greenfield group. All this stock being of one blood, was recorded under Prince of Middlesex re Lady Greenfield.

I then, for future males, bred "Mark Pitman" to Lady Pitman and four of her daughters. This was the first year's amalgamation, This is the origin and starting point of the Essex strain.

These in their subsequent matings produced the birds which went so largely into the hands of James E. White and George T. Pitkin of Chicago, Ill.; Sid Conger of Indianapolis, Ind., and Dennis Tasker of Brattleboro, Vt. The cock, "Brattleboro, 5794," afterwards known as "Crown Prince," with ten of his pullets, with nine of the hens and fourteen of the cockerels bred on the French place, went into the hands of Mr. Hawkins, and became the foundation of his "Royal Blue strain."

From these same birds came the hen known as "Lady Bowker," which with others of her sisters was the fountain head of John B. Bowker's successful breeding, which he sold out when he gave up the breeding at a wonderful price for those days.

So potent was the blood, that for ten years ninety-five per cent of the prizes throughout the country were won by birds that were one-half, three-fourths, or fully of the blood of this amalgamation.

Then what folly to claim any one of the chance specimens previous to 1869 as being the origin of the Plymouth Rock of our land, when its completion was effected in 1878. Up to that time, between the years 1869 to 1878, they enjoyed the doubtful appellation, "The Great American mongrel," feathered legs and white ears following a majority of the specimens bred.

For six years with Mr. May, (and with Mr. French till he died), my relations with those two men were as now I am related with my present breeders. If readers will consult the pages of the "American Poultry Pedigree Book," they will see who entered the pedigree of the stock of which I write, and can trace the stock as I have indicated. During all this time I mated the stock that produced the specimens therein recorded until the book ceased to be published From that time to this have I controlled some part of the Rocks that have been bred from this wonderful family.

That the first Plymouth Rock pullet gaining a record of ninety-six points was one-fourth Light Brahma blood, is true; but that the cross was anything but an accident, I deny. The same with a cockerel which came by a Dark Brahma hen running with chickens in a yard of Plymouth Rocks I had upon the Fisk farm. I sold him, telling the man who bought him his pedigree. That bird won, like the Drake birds, more than one first prize.

But I am telling too much—but not all I can tell. Enough that the present Plymouth Rocks are an amalgamation of nearly all the early strains that had their day as American mongrels. Out of that chaos of chance came elements that when amalgamated have given us a race all are proud of, it being America's first achievement in breed making, which as yet stands unrivaled—no one man its creator.—I. K. Felch in Farm Poultry.

To Breeders and Fanciers.

I would like to call the attention of breeders of the birds called Anconas to a few facts in regard to these birds and ask why they are not called Mottled Leghorns, as I have bred and studied these birds for five years with Buff, Brown and White Leghorns and I find that other than color they are identical with the Leghorns, and I believe it is generally understood that shape and characteristics make the breed and color makes a variety. If this is the rule, why not class this handsome variety where it should be? For I defy any judge, however critical, to distinguish one from the other, with the exception of color. They are a variety worthy of more general culture, and I, for one, would like to see them classed where they rightly belong—as Leghorns. Would like to hear from others on the subject. H. W. MORGAN.

Mr. Story Analyses the Vote.

Editor American Fancier: In all the controversy going on through your paper there has been the most kind personal feeling towards everybody, Mr. Northup not excepted, and to promote Minorcas some have seen fit to make a personal issue, which is not to my personal wish or desire. I always try to avoid fighting. I am a man of peace, but, insisting, I will get up at night to accommodate.

In reply to the article in the issue of October 12th, 1901, I would respectfully give the following facts:

First, I received the following card, dated March 20, 1901, from Mr. Charles L. Blanton, secretary: "To the members of the American Black Minorca Club. You are hereby requested to express your preference for judge of the Black Minorca class at the Philadelphia show, to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 28 to Jan. 2 next. F. B. Zimmer, Geo. O. Brown, J. D. Nevius, Geo. H. Northup, T. F. McGrew, Rowland Story, and Mr. McKenzie, of Michigan, have all been mentioned in this connection. The Philadelphia management wish to have three names recommended to them so they may make their choice. Your early compliance with this request will be greatly appreciated." The Keystone Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association asked the club to submit three names for judge of Minorcas. They did not ask for the man with the most votes, nor for the first, second or third choice. I should say they reserved some latitude to themselves to select their choice from the three submitted names, as is the usual custom. Our secretary saw fit to take a vote for judge from the members, which was passed upon by the board of directors. The board of directors instructed the secretary to inform the Keystone P., P. and P. S. Association that Messrs Northup, Zimmer and Story were three suitable persons, satisfactory to the club. I was chosen one of the three. The members not being instructed to give one name, which would show who the one individual might be whom they would elect, and not being instructed either to name them in the order of one, two or three, as Mr. Northup would also imply at random, not being instructed otherwise (and it not being called for), the members wrote three names and as they happened to be on the paper of the vote returned, and as they follow in order—remember at random—the following is the vote:

OFFICIAL RESULT OF THAT VOTE.

	1st.	2nd.	3rd.		Total.
Northup ...	27	10	1	..	38
Zimmer	23	3	4	..	30
Story	7	9	7	..	23

The next candidate following had a total of twelve, then nine, then four, and six with one vote each, making a total of 122, the full number of names on votes taken; and on the official list before me now Mr. Northup's name is on the same individual vote with my name from the same members several times. Because his name happened to be written or remembered first by the member voting, our secretary concluded that he was first choice, and so, unintentionally I suppose, placed this "chaplet" on the brow of George H. Northup, Esq. Three competent judges of Minorcas were requested without reference to the number of votes cast or who was first, second or third choice. I would not have your readers or any club member misconstrue my meaning. I should have been pleased to have placed the awards at Philadelphia regardless of the club meeting there and also at a club meeting, and should have given my very best efforts to place them correctly and take more time, trouble and thought to those ends than I ever did in making any selections of my own for a show. In the former case someone else would suffer if I erred; in the latter no one but myself. In 1899 Mr. Northup judged Minorcas at Philadelphia; it was common report, not denied by Mr. Northup at the time, that he sold the cock that won 1st prize under his own judging. Here is where he erred and somebody else suffered.

I will not go further into the merits of the judgment in this case, but will say this bird was shown at New York the same winter, about two months after, without being placed.

I frankly acknowledge that my human judgment is not "supernatural" and, like all the human race, I am liable to not have reached the goal of "perfection" yet. I am modest enough to admit this human and honest concession. If Mr. Northup as above presented has not in the past exhibited any special great knowledge over others with the Minorca breed, he certainly has demonstrated one fact—that he has some knowledge of the fundamental rules of arithmetic (his multiplication table), but this seems to be in good keeping with his former good judgment(?).

I would also respectfully submit the following facts and mention some of the things I want to take credit for in the club, as my one sole object has ever and always been to promote to the highest the best success of the Minorca breed. To accomplish this, I acted for two years as secretary and treasurer of the club, devoting very much time to it, was associate editor of ten or more poultry papers in different parts of the country of a special Minorca issue. This has done much to promote the breed. My influence and vote in the board of directors I may say also helped to decide going to Philadelphia for the annual meeting of the club.

I notice in the October 12th issue of the American Fancier a long list of club specials. I call attention to the last one, which I suggested and helped to carry through the board of directors—a membership to July 1st, 1902, to a Minorca breeder who makes four or more entries at Philadelphia not already a club member.

Through certain causes Mr. Northup acknowledges his stomach to be in very bad condition. I certainly must agree with him in this respect, even if I disagree with him in others, and respectfully remark for the sake of the Minorca breed anyhow that his brain and aching head must be in a far worse condition. I certainly condole with his unfortunate situation as stated by himself, and by the vote he received I know he has many more sympathizers—as exhibited by the official list of votes before me now.

Perhaps these few facts presented in this article will act as a "purgative" for some of those ailments which he acknowledges to be afflicted with in his criticism of my vote.

Now, dear reader, ponder, who is in the right?
Always truth is better, remember, in any fight.
Read all the articles given—one, two, three,
And I think when done you'll surely give that winning vote to me.

I now do thank all my friends and Mr. Northup, too,
For giving me this lovely "chance" to show this vote to you;
And when to Philadelphia we all soon will go
I only hope Minorcas will lead all the show.

Blue Andalusian Club.

Editor American Fancier: The Blue Andalusian Club was organized in January, 1901. It was voted at the meeting that persons joining the Club shall be responsible for the dues of the year in which they join.

It is the purpose of the Club at first to secure better notice of the breed in the poultry journals, and to bring the merits of this variety of fowl more prominently before the public by special articles in the poultry journals, and by encouraging an interest in the breed in the smaller as well as the larger shows.

It is proposed to offer special ribbons at some of the principal poultry shows in the large cities this winter. The Club is not yet in a position to offer cash prizes, but an offer has been made to secretaries of said shows that the Club will furnish four ribbons, one for each of the classes.

The Secretary has in preparation a list of persons believed to be breeding Andalusians in this country. It is intended solely for the use of members, and will be forwarded free to members upon application to secretary.

The second annual meeting of the Club will be held in Mechanics' Building, Boston, at 12 o'clock, noon, January 15th, 1902. Persons desirous of joining the Club should apply to one of the officers, by whom they will be presented to the executive committee.

White Langshans.

Editor American Fancier: It is our purpose to present briefly in this sketch our estimate of a new breed that is attracting considerable attention. All our statements are critical without any excessive praise, neither magnifying their good qualities nor minimizing the defects of the White Langshan. They are not a recent applicant for public favor although only just receiving the recognition proportionate to their worth. Silently and unattended by any meritorious "boom" practices, they pursued their gain in popular favor. What place they occupy they obtained it through meritorious qualities. For some time Langshans lay under the ban of popular prejudice, relegated because of their color and origin to the background. No matter how cheerful their song nor hallowed their labor to fill the egg basket, nor how lordly, just like a perfect gentleman they bore every indignity heaped against them. Like Ishmael, every hand seemed raised against the Black Langshans. Those professing the highest admiration for them mutilated their symmetry by introducing alien blood to quickly attain the current type of Langshans now squatty, heavily feathered, broad cushioned like Cochins, then over-reaching, gaunt, tight feathered like the Game, until their Chinese progenitors no longer recognized their "poor relations." Discouraged and disgusted many amateurs forsook the breeding of them and new friends it found none. Too many difficulties and defects in that breed.

It was at this inauspicious season when the fortunes of the Blacks were on the decline, discarded in the market stalls because as broilers their black pin feathers made slow sales, discounted more and more by fanciers because the popular demand for black colored fowls was diminishing, that the White Langshans offered themselves as substitutes.

Let us discuss their origin. Years ago "way back yonder" in the 80's, a certain English fancier announced to the English breeders that he was the fortunate possessor of some white plumaged birds the progeny of Black Langshans. What discordant clamors this announcement provoked found echo even in Miss Croad's book on the "Langshan Fowl." Every mischievous assertion, the stock impure, foreign males stealthily doing the base work, or some interloper purposely thrust upon the "shan" community, were the incredible utterances of all. This universal and increasing repudiation by the foremost breeders produced the expected results. Those who had white young sacrificed them to the hatchet ashamed to press their claim to purity in the face of such pretentious opposition. Thus immolated on the altar of determined enemies the White Langshans became fugitives on the face of the earth. Indeed a kindred spirit of dubium has developed in our midst, for I have read over the signature of a certain important breeder the assertion that he had never witnessed evidence of the sport to white from a flock of Langshans of genuine and unquestioned 'purity," and that he concluded their origin to arise in the admixture of foreign blood either surreptitiously or designedly, declaring in summary that White Langshans were importers, a mere cross of White Cochins. Rather broad and positive indeed such statements but reduced to their reality only plain sophistry. Because forsooth one man does not embrace in the horizon of his experience certain phenomena therefore none such exist? Fortunately I can controvert this testimony by living proofs that Black Langshans of undoubted purity have sported to white. Meanwhile the discussion abroad assumed milder, more reasonable examination, and Miss Croad acknowledged that rumors were current in China of a white species, and that probably may be, since black will sport to white. Years later a few daring and resolute breeders in America began to disseminate the Whites, but they were birds inferior in type and weight. This is how they originated with me. I had long exclusively bred the Black Langshans of the purest Chinese stock on my place, when some years ago I was surprised during the hatching season to discover nestling amidst a crowd of Black Langshan chicks, a white stranger. There never was any but black males in my yards nor any white one in my immediate neighborhood. True I had harbored a company of strolling Pekin ducklings—the greatest nuisance on my place—they were white and plump, and to their presence I always attributed this aberration in color of my Langshans. The mysterious part in the proceedings was that not all the females suffered through this gay diversion, only one high scoring pullet of prolific laying qualities and distantly related on the male side to the other two. The product of these hens comprised the foundation of my stock. For any breed to become popular there are certain requisites expected in the fowls. If posessed, that breed will surge to the front, if absent they will disappear. Extravagant claims and heavy advertising can accomplish wonders, but the public soon exploits the unknown and the breed sinks to the level of its worth. How many former promising new-comers after romantic careers, finished with a crash and oblivion. The public highways are full of their memories and wrecks. It's nature's way. These requisites are certain characteristics in the fowls and can be briefly summarized as follows: Is it a general purpose fowl, good for eggs and meat, useful as well as ornamental, fixed in its markings, readily acclimated, hardy in constitution and robust in vigor, easy to rear and free from inherent disease? We find in the White Langshan a fowl excelled by none as a general purpose fowl. This fact the sagacious Chinaman soon became acquainted with. Do you comprehend the grand character of the famous Black Langshans, its quick, nervous movements, yet docile disposition, adapting itself readily to its surroundings whether it be confinement or free access to range, good or indifferent care, its notable qualities of excellent flesh and great winter laying? Its earnestness in motherhood diligently caring for large broods, its industry in foraging for its own livelihood, its rugged constitution and freedom from disease? Does not this description represent a fowl of eminent worth? Yet this all can equally be said of the White Langshans, really as good a general purpose fowl as ever were the famous Black Langshans. There is no difference in them except color, and, owing to their origin in my strain, an improvement in laying which is accidental. There is one drawback in the Blacks; a serious detriment those pin feathers, a disadvantage that lasts all through their broiler period. In this the Whites are their superior, for commercially they just suit the early markets receiving by far the highest price of the market. Moreover the culls can at early stages be disposed of and proper attention given to worthier doubles.

Do the White Langshans breed true to feathers? Are the markings fixed? Yes. But do not some come mottled or do not even Blacks appear among the young? In my strain there are no appearances of reversion, no irregularities, the young come pure white, back grayish, beak and toe nails white, face, wattles and earlobes red. The transformation consists in a harmony of brilliant colors, strange even in nature. This coming true to feather indicates the strain is not a composite one, a cross of black on foreign white, but pure. A true realization in nature and not an imitation of it. Like purple barring in the Blacks, the Whites have their bane in brassiness and yellow in wingbow, back and hackles. Impurities in the breed quickly disclose their ancestry. Yellow in the face or anywhere indicates Cochin origin, white in earlobes Minorca, etc. The Whites resemble the Blacks in that remarkable trait of being easy to keep up in vigor. There is no difficulty to obtain the Standard weights and I possess birds yet pullets far in excess of Standard requirements. Yet I often see exhibited puny, undersized wretches. They are examples of bad methods, excessive forcing by condiments to early maturity, too much meat developing large externals, wattles, combs, etc., abnormally but small frames and stunted specimens. Such methods operate as dissipation on human kind: veritable hot house plants pampered and coddled by false feed and service. Hence arises the penalty of outraging nature's laws. From these we learn the proper system of feeding and breeding. Do the children of the forest and stream have food and pleasure pumped into them: warm mashes full of condiments for breakfast, soups and pies for dinner, chocolate and cream for supper and constant opportunity to enjoy siesta all day long? Do the pheasants of the prairie have patent foods and sweetmeats? Never! Dame Nature provides none of these for her votaries, yet how they thrive upon her varied diet, what colors she imparts to plumage, defying the cunning hand of the artist to reproduce. Such vigor and hardiness no medicine chest can procure. By the sweat of their brows they obtain each morsel of food and only such as grows upon the fields they forage. The lessons nature inculcates are not to be despised, and it is always my endeavor to keep natural conditions for my flocks and I find the reward in health and stamina. Nature's rules observed and the constitution not shattered by constant inbreeding, vigor can easily be maintained in the White Langshan. In our latitude, this spring has indeed been a trying one upon the young. It was an admirable test, for only the hardy and sturdy failed to succumb to rain and cold; damp days have alternated with scarcely any sunshine yet my early broods have admirably withstood the inclement weather without mortality. They have shown a rugged constitution and rapid growth. The February hatches were disposed of in the first days of April when springers were 30 cents a pound. These birds tip the scales at 1½ pounds.

Are White Langshans hardy? This is a relevant question since many erroneous opinions divide the public because they associate hardihood with color. Many extravagant assertions are made by quondam connoisseurs who declare color qualities arise from pigments in the blood, and white originates in specimens low in proper qualities to bequeath to their progeny a stronger shade. Again they assert, are not all white fowls delicate and puny underweights, undersized, etc? Why look at the White Cochin, White Minorca, etc? Why I am constrained to believe some of these past masters believe that only the white winged angels floating in ethereal space are hardy but no other terrestrial. Perhaps reason may induce a changed disposition of mind. I agree that some white colored fowls are delicate, puny, undersized, etc., but not all, notably the White Langshan of proper origin and cultivation. What does nature prove? Does she clothe the fields of early spring with diversity of color or are the first flowery appearances the white dewdrop covered with snow and ice? Where do the white foxes, white bears and numerous other white colored animals dwell? Is it amidst the tropics, on the luxurious southern meadows? No! These white furred animals have their habitat in the wild frozen north, the wild frozen north, the home of the blizzard, the realm of snow and ice. If color has any significance in nature the white color denotes the high, dry altitudes of the hills. Far behind this surface color nature endows her offspring with the accompanying strength and ruggedness of constitution to successfully withstand the climate she destines them for. This I have verified in the young White Langshans. At 12 weeks the February hatches are ready for the high priced early market because of the hardiness and vigor of growth. Is it not profitable to grow such a crop and can they be successfully reared at that season? Yes! Provided dry sheltered quarters be given them. Dry under foot, sheltered from piercing wind and cold rains, with a penetrating mist. We raise all our young under hens, as described above, without artificial heat but in warm houses. We began our incubation in January and ended it in May. We avoided the mid-season scourge of vermin and disease and have thrifty chicks ready to face the exactions and lassitude of hot July weather. There is no more beautiful sight, full of variety in colors than a Langshan nest. Eggs, pink tinted, dark salmon, nut colored, some dotted with white or heavy with hoar frost, others splashed with brown like a prairie pheasant's treasures. Then more beautiful still when bursting into being, that nest with its struggling mass of downy grey and white chicks. Condensed, the secret of rearing Langshans is in these quarters, "keep them warm and keep them dry," for they are not ducks, mudlarks or penguins. On the commercial side White Langshans invite interest and attention. They are pre-eminently the poulterer's fowl, fine in carcass and edible qualities. Therefore, summed up the reasons why the splendid future is in store for the White Langshans is, they are winter layers, the season of high prices for eggs; in the spring they are plump broilers and in summer and fall we have them as roasters. No season therefore in which they cannot be utilized, and all because of their color. There is no more ravishing sight to a fancier's vision than a flock of White Langshans like a bridal procession gleefully fluttering about their range, the green intensifying their whiteness and sprightly mien. To their attractiveness I believe we owe the present revival of interest in this famous breed, a revival that is noticed by every breeder through the numerous requests for stock or eggs. It behooves all fanciers interested in their successful career to strive faithfully and honestly to propagate them.

Editor American Fancier: I wish you would accord me a notice to the effect that, notwithstanding the fact that my name appears in the list of exhibitors at the "Pan," I had no birds there. The fact of the matter is that I have been away from home so much this fall, I had no time to get birds up and in condition to show. I have a fine lot of youngsters that I am now getting in from the country and will be in shape to take the best of care of my patrons.

The American Buff Plymouth Rock Club.

Editor American Fancier: A special meeting of the American Buff Plymouth Rock Club was held in connection with the poultry exhibit at the Pan-American, in the Agricultural building, Thursday, October 24th, at 2 p. m. Meeting was called to order by the president, Dr. O. P. Bennett, who made some pleasant remarks upon taking the chair. The roll call found twenty-one members present, including the majority of officers and executive committee. W. C. Denny made a few remarks on the loss we had sustained in the death of the veteran Buff Rock breeder, H. S. Burdick, and moved that a committee, consisting of Messrs. Arnold, Foster, Benedict and Shepherd be appointed to draft suitable resolutions on the occasion. It was moved that W. C. Denny be added to the committee, and so carried. An interesting talk was given by F. C. Shepherd on the great improvement made in color, while H. E. Benedict called attention to the defect in color of eye, which must, by so many, be overcome. Also interesting remarks by M. F. Delano, C. W. Beman and Eugene Sites. The members extended a vote of thanks to W. C. Denny for the manner in which he had placed the awards at this exhibit. It was then announced that our annual meeting would probably be held in connection with the Boston show.

THE PIGEON STANDARD just issued by C. E. Twombly, editor of the Pigeon News, is a book that fills a "long felt want." It is well gotten up, contains a number of good illustrations, and is indispensable to every fancier of pigeons Price, 50 cents. Orders filled through the office of the American Fancier.

PIGEONS.

Lofty Thoughts of the Editor

The time of the season has arrived when those who have a few birds will look them over with a view to showing them at a few of the many shows now held. First on the list comes the Washington, D. C., show, with J. Bardroff as superintendent and C. E. Twombly as judge. That "Joe" is a hustler and will do all in his power to score a success we haven't the slightest doubt, as he is a winner in that line. So, boys, send on a good string to Washington and let us see if we can't make it a permanent fixture.

We have had several write us regarding the Philadelphia show, and from what we learn Mr. Cheston has got interested some of the right sort. There is no doubt that Philadelphia will have many more birds in their pigeon section than last year; in fact, she is heading New York and Boston way and bids fair to rival them both in the course of a few years. This is as it should be, and with a few fanciers with the proper spirit working for the show we feel sure that success is assured. After the latter, we shall have a wait of about a month and then New York and Boston will be upon us. Of course, they are in a class by themselves, and most fanciers will do the best they can to give each a fair entry, though no doubt many will favor the show nearest.

In a talk with Charles E. Lang, the secretary of the Jacobin Club, he is looking forward to a very large entry of Jackies at Boston, and if they turn out in such numbers as he suggests it seems the Boston management are liable to need more pens than they have yet used, for I hear many young exhibitors are to be added to the long list of old ones who are going to show Tumblers at the annual club meet, and from an approximate made by Mr. Joseph Dutra we are to see the remarkable show of seven hundred Tumblers at Boston the coming year.

In a talk with parties who are close to the New York show, the idea seems to prevail that Fans are to be the banner lot, closely followed by the Carriers, and with the Owl Club and Turbit Club meets, New York is sure to have a very good display of pigeons.

We hear Alex. Ingram is engaged to judge at New York and that Joseph Gavin and George Feather's terms have been accepted, and "Billy" Stanton, who is also to judge at Boston, is to judge the Fans later at New York.

We have also heard that Boston is to be visited this year by a large number of fanciers who have never before attended. We hope they will be there for the annual Thursday evening banquet, as that is a feature that is thoroughly Bostonian and to some is the feature. We have heard that A. B. Hoskins, Andrew W. Hall, C. A. Koehler, Chas. E. Lang, and the Messrs. Diffenderffer are sure to be present at the Jack meet, and that H. D. Kirkover, Jr., Richard Congdon, J. A. Atwood, and others not now to mind, who are interested in Tumblers, will also be present.

One of the nice features at the Pan-American was the large number who met for the first time. Many met who had heard of each other, but had never had the pleasure of a chat. We had the pleasure of a renewal of acquaintance in the case of H. B. Donovan and Chas. Wagner, both of Toronto, Canada—the former a World's Fair acquaintance and the latter dating from the Louisville show in '91. I believe we also met for the first time the two Mr. Asmans and T. Jenner, of Detroit, and met an old acquaintance by correspondence in the person of Mr. Oscar Brown. It took a Pan-American to make "Old Jack" Glasgow and "Fantail" Gilbert chummy. So mote it be.

K. J. Muir, of Chicago, secretary of the Western Tumbler Club, made a record as judge in the Clean Leg Tumblers that he may be proud of. I am not going to claim he made no mistakes, for he did, but for a man to go on to a job of judging among classes the very cream of which were hidden, and all of which had never been seen before, and for him to time after time go into the classes and get the proper birds is a feat that no eastern judge has yet had to run up against. Here was a man who was tested if ever a man was. Only a Clean Leg breeder in a very moderate way, never made any puff or blow, but when called upon goes in and does his best and with a characteristic that is common in Chicago—get's there.

Goldman's Homer Makes a Record.

Editor American Fancier: A special race of the Manhattan Homing Pigeon Club and District, was flown from the 100 mile station, Wilmington, Del., on Tuesday, November 5th, election day, the feature of the race being rain or shine and entries limited to three birds a loft, the members competing subscribing a very handsome sum of cash to be distributed to the three birds making the best speed. The birds were liberated by J. M. Huff, who wired "birds liberated 9:50 a. m., weather cloudy, slight east wind." At home weather threatening with occasional showers, wind of a squally nature, blowing a gale at times from the northwest, this condition prevailing throughout the entire course, the elements of the weather being such as to almost render pigeon flying impossible. The winner was our old veteran and renowned fancier, Mr. T. Fred. Goldman, who had the only return, a Blue Checker Splash hen R8741, making a speed of 489.56 yards per minute, truly proving the stamina and Homing qualities of this bird. The bird was bred from his famous Ned R blood, crossed with a late importation from the celebrated Gits loft of Antwerp. In view of the fact that this was the only return, the members competing voted the entire prize fund donated to the winner for this most excellent performance. JOHN FISCHER, Sec'y.

PET STOCK.

The Brood Doe.

Editor American Fancier: Too much care cannot be bestowed upon the selection of the brood doe. When the object of the breeder was the most rapid multiplication of the numbers of Belgian hares, every doe, irrespective of suitableness and quality, was pressed into the service. But now that the object of the breeder is, or ought to be, the production of the highest quality, inferior does, like inferior bucks, should be eaten, not bred from. While the stock buck will always be selected with great care, and such selection ought to be made, the best breeders will bestow great care, also, upon the selection of their brood does.

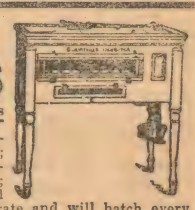
While the buck exerts the greatest influence upon the products of a rabbitry, because his influence is felt upon all the young, in some respects, at least, the doe will exert the greater influence upon the young she bears. This will be seen, I think, especially in size. In all stock breeding it is almost an axiom that size is dependent more upon the female than upon the male If one of the pair must be under-sized, it is better that it should be the male than the female. The brood doe, therefore, ought to be as large as can be obtained, without, of course, neglecting other essential qualities.

All Belgians are desired to be rangy, but ranginess is a quality especially to be desired in a doe. She needs to be long in order to have ample room in which to carry her young. Such does are apt to produce more young than the cobby built ones, and are, also, apt to prove more generous milkers and therefore better rearers of the young produced. Extreme length is often coupled with some apparent coarseness. The cobby built animals usually look more smoothly turned than the long rangy ones, but for breeding purposes they are less valuable. While coarseness is not, of itself, a desirable quality, coarseness which is the accompaniment and resultant of size and ranginess is always to be tolerated.

To obtain the necessary size in a brood doe, she should not be put to breeding at an early age. While, perhaps, she would breed when four or five months old, she would do so at the expense of growth. Seven months is the very earliest age at which she should be permitted to visit the buck, and one or two months additional age will do no harm. A doe, to secure her best development, should be close upon a year old before she is allowed to breed. The time which seems to be thus wasted will not be lost, for she will produce enough better stock to more than compensate for the delay. And the best in Belgian hares is what is now needed. Not early breeding, not numbers, but high quality should be the aim.

Given sufficient age, large size and great length, we have the foundation principles upon which to select the brood doe. But upon this foundation the superstructure of other qualities should be built. We desire, in addition thereto, good color. The red should be as deep and rich as possible, the lacing of the ears well defined, the black ticking reasonably abundant, well disposed and of clear color. The doe's head should be lean, fine, free from all tendencies to coarseness. A little coarseness in the head may be tolerated in the buck, as that is a masculine characteristic, but none should be tolerated in the doe.

Belgian does, especially if they are good breeders and mothers, have a tendency to produce a small dewlap. We prefer them without this appendage, but would not reject a doe which possessed it, if in other respects she were just what was desired. Better have a good doe with a small dewlap than even a fair one without a dewlap. But best of all it is to have a good doe without a dewlap



After the young doe has been carefully selected and put to breeding, the final test comes. Of a number of does of apparently equal merit, some will be much better breeders than others. They will produce more young, of better quality, and nourish them much better. It is the doe that will produce the best results that we all desire to possess. When one has a doe that will produce good sized litters, of especially fine quality, and will keep the young fat and growing, it is difficult to measure her value in dollars. What would be a good price for an average doe is an insignificant price for such an one. When I was breeding Indian Games I had one hen that money, that is, the amount of money that even the most liberal fancier would be likely to pay, would not buy. I kept her for seven years and she was an old hen when I first imported her. She got to an age where she would lay but few eggs, and still she was not for sale. The reason was plain enough to me. Not a chicken hatched from her eggs that would not readily bring at least ten dollars, and some of them brought much more. Figure out what such a hen was worth to me in cash, to say nothing of the satisfaction I had in her progeny, and you will be surprised, perhaps, at her actual value. Take, then, a brood doe of the Belgian hare, whose young are uniformly of the highest grade, figure twenty-four young reared in a year, and say what she is actually worth. No man outside of a lunatic asylum would dare to pay one-half the value of such a doe to possess her, and the owner ought to be inside a lunatic asylum which would sell her for half her value. The fact is, paradoxical as it may seem, that no one can afford to pay for a first-class tested Belgian doe one-half of her real value and no one can afford to sell such a doe for one-half of her real value, because the purchaser would be quickly put under guardianship as a spendthrift and the seller would deserve to be for his lack of business acumen. You can never buy of a level headed breeder his best doe, provided his best is one that comes up to a high ideal as a breeder, because he would ask for her more than anyone would pay.

After the actual test in breeding, save for brood purposes only the few best does, selling the others for meat or for breeding to those whose ideals are more easily satisfied than is your ideal. But don't be in too great haste to do this. The first or the second litter is not a sufficient test. Young does often do poorly with the first litter and sometimes also with the second, and yet a little later prove to be very successful breeders. Hence it is not wise to decide too hastily. Give them a fair chance and then, and then only, make your final selection. By doing in this way a breeder will secure brood does that will help to establish a good reputation for his rabbitry and will produce young that will sell readily at good prices. H. S. BABCOCK.

Big Money in Chickens

By Using a Globe Incubator Many Men and Women Add $500 a Year to their Income.

Easy Work and Little Expense.

Any man or woman can raise chickens successfully with a Globe Incubator, and there is a lot of money to be made all the year round by the small as well as the large chicken-raiser. There is always a good cash market for chickens, and the Globe Incubator hatches out healthier, stronger chicks and more of them to the 100 eggs than any other incubator on the market. It is so simple to operate and regulate that any person can handle it successfully, and to day hundreds of men and women, business men, preachers, teachers, mechanics, railroad men, clerks and day laborers as well as farmers and farmers' wives are adding a snug sum to their annual income with chicken-money and without any cash outlay to speak of. There are to day many of the large chicken-raisers who number their profits by the thousands of dollars and occupy whole farms with their chicken-houses and yards who started with one Globe Incubator and it did the rest. Leisure hours with the Globe will produce chickens for family use and net a nice sum of pocket-money besides, every year. Write C. C. Shoemaker, Box 440, Freeport, Ill., to day and he will send you his price list and catalogue of Globe Incubators and tell you free how you can add $500 or more to your annual income in an easy, pleasant manner and not require much cash to start. 26-38

MOUNTAINSIDE LOFTS and Poultry Yards, Mahwah, N. J., Havemeyer Bros., Proprietors; John Glasgow, Manager. Mountainside Lofts at the great Pan-American exhibition added another to their long list of past records in winnings in Game and Variety Bantams. Every exhibit, 30 birds, secured a prize including 13 firsts and 9 seconds; 42 birds and the National Bantam Association special for best Game Bantam in the show, any variety, and this in the hottest of hot competition. The Pan-American was no fall show but a strictly up-to-date high class exhibition. We have a surplus supply of high class stock and show Bantams for disposal (excepting Silver and Golden Duckwings) of all varieties, bred on the same lines as our winners at the Pan-American, that we are prepared to sell at reasonable prices consistent with quality. We sell no stock at less than $5 each, so don't write for any under that figure. We use the knife freely on all specimens not cheap at a five dollar bill and only sell what we know will do us credit and give the purchaser satisfaction. Early purchasers can buy from us specimens that can win in prize money what they pay for them before the show season is over, and have them to breed from afterwards, costing nothing. All communications and inquiries for stock should be made to the manager to receive prompt attention. The best criterion of a breeder's stock is consistent winnings wherever exhibited with specimens bred on their own yards, and this the proprietors of Mountainside Lofts and Poultry Yards lay undisputed claim to. 28-37

ORR'S SILVER WYANDOTTES ALWAYS AT THE FRONT.

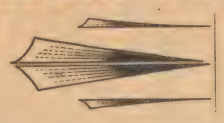
'TWAS SO IN 1885

At the great Wheeling Show—95 Silver Wyandottes present,—the birds of T. E. ORR won 17 of the 27 Regular and Special Prizes offered.....

'TWAS SO IN 1901

At the GREAT PAN-AMERICAN, T. E. ORR'S Beaver Hill Farm Silvers won just ONE HALF the money paid in Regular Prizes on Silver Wyandottes.



When it is Remembered that there were ten competitors and sixty Silvers, making what many have said was the "FINEST SHOW OF SILVERS EVER SEEN"—1st and 2nd Cock, 2d Hen, 2nd Pullet and 2nd Pen is not a bad showing.

What Have We to Sell?

A few good breeding birds, especially a lot of good Cockerels. :-: Remember these birds have been LINE BRED FOR TWENTY YEARS, with "Eggs Early and Often" as our Special Motto.

Not a drop of English blood in any Wyandotte we ever bred—America is good enough for us.....

A GOLDEN OPPORTUNITY!

To Secure One of the Grandest Lots of Golden Wyandottes in the World.....

Owing to unforseen circumstances, I am compelled to dispose of my entire flock of GOLDEN WYANDOTTES, including the winners at prominent shows as well as MANY PROMISING YOUNGSTERS.....

The foundation of my strain was the famous and unbeaten cock "MARVEL"

Mated to selected females bred from WINNING LINES.....

Nothing Under the Sun Will Make Hens Lay

And keep them in healthy condition all the year round Like BANNER EGG FOOD AND TONIC.

It starts the pullets laying, and will keep them at it all through the winter, when eggs are very scarce.

We are having our SIXTH ANNUAL SALE during NOVEMBER and have some special inducements to offer those who have never tried it, as well as old customers, who know a good thing when they see it.

During this sale we will sell a 1 lb box for 15c; or 7 1 lb boxes for $1. The regular price is, 1 lb box 25c; or 5 1 lb boxes, $1, so it will be to your advantage to order this at the reduced price. In addition to the reduction in price, we will give with each order for 7 1 lb boxes, one of KUHN'S EGG RECORD AND ACCOUNT BOOKS, which retail at 25c. each, or to those who order $2 worth. or 14 1 lb boxes. we will give a book, which every poultryman needs, entitled "LITTLE CHICKS," which retails for 50c. each. It contains special articles by M. K. BOYER, P H. JACOBS, G. W. NONES, W. W. KULP, A. G. DUSTON, A. F. COOPER, M. V. NORYS, and other well known poultrymen. The information it contains is worth $100 00 to any breeder.

Remember these special prices and offers are for the month of NOVEMBER ONLY and no orders will be filled after NOVEMBER 30TH, at the above reduced prices.

Send your orders in at once. and we will fill orders as soon as received.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale; and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15. one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

Wood & Freeman, Fitchburg, Mass., write that they will exchange trios and pens of their Silver and Golden Wyandottes for Hamburgs or Dorkings.

We regret to learn that Mr. J. A. Shineman, Canajoharie, N. Y., will retire from the fancy and close out all of his Barred Rocks and White Leghorns, including all his winners. Mr. Shineman has built up a nice trade and made quite a reputation for himself as a skillful breeder of the above varieties. But other business will require all of his time for a few years to come, after which he expects to again take up the fancy.

The reports of Bantams having been stolen, lost or exchanged at the Pan-American, as well as at a few other large shows, reveal a condition of things that must be thoroughly investigated. For a number of years past complaints have been made that some person or persons present at shows relieve the absent exhibitors of choice specimens of the Bantam tribe. It is strange that only the best birds are "swiped." Consequently the thief or thieves are experts at the business. As long as the real culprit or culprits are not discovered, innocent exhibitors are liable to suffer from unjust suspicion. It seems to us a very good plan for the National Bantam Association to take up this matter and gather information, and evidence if possible, and bring it up at the next annual meeting.

Gasper Tarr, New Stanton, Pa., is making a pretty swift record with his Buff Rocks. His winnings at Hagerstown and Pittsburg startled a few of the old timers, but young blood is bound to win out very frequently, and the American Fancier has the most kindly wishes for the success of the beginners and "little fellows." It keeps the "big 'uns" on their mettle. Mr. Tarr now being a full fledged "big 'un," can expect all the fun he desires at future great shows.

Mr. J. W. Jodrey, Danvers, Mass., whose excellent Silver Wyandottes at the Boston show each year have elicited so many favorable comments, writes us:

"I appreciate all your kind work for good Silvers, and without doubt they have been improved the last few years, due in a great measure to the introduction of English blood, but we all own that this blood has its defects as well as its good points. We cannot get everything at once. I despise poor shape as much as any one and am doing my best to improve all along the line. There seems to be a disposition on the part of some breeders (recently out of the bush) to cry down the English blood, but I know for a fact that those fanciers have plenty of English blood in their yards and are using it too, and would have had more if they could have had the pick of my flock. Some of my females have such dark under-color that if I use a male with any under-color to mention, every cockerel will be useless for anything but the pot. For best results in breeding I prefer sound surface color in male and under-color in females. I think Silver males ought to be judged on shape and surface color. If males of light under-color are to be thrown down in the show room, then we will have to adopt double matings to get Standard males. I have some males this year with good under-color, but lo and behold, most all have a white belly band. At the last Boston show you said of the 2d cockerel that he would make a wonderful breeder properly mated. Well, I have seen pullets from him that are pretty near wonderful. It may interest you to know that my first cock in Boston, 1901, was sire of all the young stock I had in the show, excepting a pen pullet and the 5th cockerel."

We gladly give space to the above as we have a pretty thorough acquaintance with Mr. Jodrey and respect him not only as a sincere fancier but a thorough gentleman as well. He loves the Silver Wyandotte fowl and has done much to improve it and make it again popular in New England in the past few years.

Now that Mr. F. L. Mattison is again taking an interest in Silvers—and he has a beautiful nucleus to start a team from—it only remains for Dr. A. T. Beckett to get into harness again, and the eastern Silver Wyandotte exhibits will be features at the big shows, especially with T. E. Orr swooping down from the Keystone State to contest the honors.

Mr. James Cheston, Jr., secretary of the Keystone Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association, in referring to the Philadelphia show, writes:

"I would be very glad if you will call attention to the fact that in our premium list there is a silver cup offered for the best display of Games other than Pit Games. This cup has been delivered to me and its value is $50.00, it being a solid silver loving cup, very handsomely gotten up with three solid ivory handles. It is really a work of art from one of our leading jewellers—Messrs. Bailey, Banks & Biddle. It was an error on our part not to make this very plain in our premium list, so as to do justice to the giver. I would be very glad if you would call attention in your next issue to the above, so that the Game fanciers may have ample time yet to enter their Games for this handsome souvenir. The rest of our show promises to be in many respects a record breaker, and indications up to the present time, although our entries do not close until the 12th of December, far exceed my fondest hopes and expectations."

The third annual show of the Wisconsin Feathered Stock Association, to be held at Broadway Armory, Milwaukee, January 8 to 12, 1902, promises to be a record breaker from advices at hand.

Dr. Henry M. Ladd, proprietor of Crescent Farm, Cleveland, Ohio, will start on January 1st a correspondence school of utility and fancy poultry. It is the first one of its kind. Being so closely connected with a large poultry farm in successful operation, it is hoped to make it more practical than it could be otherwise. A prospectus can be obtained by addressing Henry M. Ladd, Crescent Farm Office, Cleveland, Ohio.

Millville Poultry Farm, Millville, N. J., is cutting a wide swath in the premium field at the shows. The excellent management of President M. F. Delano is, of course, responsible for this. Mr. Delano's election to the secretaryship of the Waterfowl Club is a well deserved compliment. He is well qualified for the place.

To Fanciers at the Pan-American.

Permit me through the columns of the American Fancier to thank the fanciers of the United States and Canada for their kind assistance so generously accorded me at Buffalo during the life of the poultry exhibition of the Pan-American. The success belongs to them, not to me. Their kindness and willing hands, under trying circumstances, made it possible for me to bring to a successful close, the splendid poultry show they were instrumental in placing before the public.

Words fail me to express the deep gratitude I feel for this true fraternal and unselfish spirit extended to me.

Editor American Fancier: The Western Poultry Fanciers' Association of Cedar Rapids, Ia., which holds its seventh annual exhibition at Cedar Rapids on January 13 to 18, 1902, wish to call the attention of poultry fanciers to a few of the special attractions of their show. The American Buff Rock Club and the American Black Langshan Club will be two of the special features of the show.

Theo. Hewes, of Trenton, Mo., and J. A. Tucker, of Concord, Mich., will judge the poultry; R. J. Finley, of Macon, Mo., will judge the hares, and Henry Tiemann, of Baltimore, Md., will judge the pigeons. Write for premium list December 1, 1901. Entries close January 4th, at midnight.

Hilldorfer Claims 2d Prize on Black Minorca Cockerel at the Pan.

Editor American Fancier: I see in the American Fancier that Maunder & Green claim 2d prize on Black Minorca cockerel at the Pan. Now, I will tell you that I was there when the birds were judged and saw the card on the coop of my cockerel. I don't know what happened after I left Thursday night, but these people are making a lot of fuss about it. They must be large breeders of Black Minorcas, yet I don't see their name in the catalogue. The Pan-American Poultry and Pigeon Exhibition.

WHAT WE SAW THERE AND SOME OF THE BOYS WE MET.

For months and months the editors of poultry and pigeon papers did all in their power to boom what was to eclipse anything in the shape of a live stock exhibition of fur and feather that had ever taken place in this or any other country. At one time some of them had the temerity to predict that something like an entry of 20,000 specimens would be the outcome. That there were doubting Thomases by the hundreds as to any such consummation need scarcely be chronicled, and now that the Pan-American at Buffalo has dropped the curtain the doubts expressed have been, it appears. well founded. The actual count according to the official catalogue published, including breeding pens, in gross numbers bring up the exhibit to about 6,000 birds. Had there been a larger entry than there was, we don't know what the superintendents would have done with them with the accommodation at their disposal. As it was, the barns in which the birds were cooped were taxed to their fullest capacity, and barns they were; all right for cattle, sheep and hogs, probably, but in no sense suitable in which to exhibit high class poultry and pigeons.

George H. Burgott, superintendent of poultry, and C. E. Twombly, superintendent of pigeons, were indefatigable in the discharge of their duties, and although considerable red tape existed in the main office, the management worked more smoothly than might have been expected under the circumstances.

Considering the adverse circumstances attendant to the show and the season of the year in which it took place, we were agreeably surprised at the congregation there was of really high class specimens and the general condition and feather in which the exhibits were staged.

Exhibitors were indeed very lucky in striking fine weather during the period the show lasted, and but for this fact there would have been undoubtedly a big crop of sick birds. As it was, we saw really very few in proportion to the number of birds shown, and at the close of the show the birds were in as good shape as we ever remember seeing at any similar show of the kind. For this satisfactory state of affairs, exhibitors are mainly indebted to the superintendent and his deputies in the matter of supplying a plentiful supply of sound grain and clean water, and especially with regard to the latter, which everyone knows is very important. We never remember seeing more care exercised in this respect, not even at our best winter shows.

Another feature in connection with the Pan-American exhibition was the fact that the buildings were closed up every evening shortly after 5 p. m., the usual time chickens go to roost, so that outside of being cooped up they were practically under the same conditions as they would have been in their own yards and had the benefit of a good time to rest. Nothing affects chickens more than to be on exhibit after their usual time to go to roost and continually being poked at by inquisitive "know it alls," as well as ignorant "know nothings," under a blaze of gas or electric lights until well on to mid night.

It is more than probable the exhibit at the Pan-American would have fallen far short of what it attained but for the laudable action of the Dominion of Canada in appropriating money not only in paying entry fees and transportation of the exhibitors' stock, but in providing divisional expert superintendents to look after Canadian exhibits. The Empire State also did well in appropriating a sum of money wherewith to duplicate the prize money won by exhibitors resident in New York State, which no doubt was an inducement to exhibitors to send more and better birds. The poultry industry is an important one both in Canada and the States to the masses, and it is a move in the right direction for the authorities to appropriate monies to foster and enlarge the breeding of high class pedigree stock of all kinds. Encouragement given to breeders in this way will tend to stimulate the poultry industry ten times more than the thousands of dollars annually expended in the country on experimental stations, where theory and not practice plays a prominent part in the education of the students. Until we can find an experimental station that can show a profitable return in the management of their plant, so long will the practical poultryman look upon their teachings with distrust, and the figures they publish in their reports as to diet and so forth will be found as a rule thoroughly impracticable in poultry raising for profit. An ounce of practice is worth a pound of theory in the raising of poultry every time and all the time. Different varieties require radically different treatment, not only in the quantity of food they should have but the variety of food suitable to their constitution and surroundings. This fact seems to us to be totally lost sight of and ignored in the teachings of the majority of experimental stations.

But in following this line we are somewhat digressing from our subject, viz., the Pan-American Exposition and what we saw there. That the Pan-American exhibit of poultry and pigeons was a grand one there is no gainsaying the fact, and that the fanciers of both America and Canada supported it royally in the matter of entries goes without saying. The liberality, however, displayed in the prize money offered in the pigeon department, taken into consideration with the disparity in the amount of entry fee, enjoined upon the stockholders a larger deficiency than any similar exhibit of the kind ever held in the country, and was ill advised by whoever was responsible for its inception. Whilst for a number of years the pigeon men have been clamoring for more liberal treatment in combination shows of poultry, pigeons and pet stock, the management of such associations know full well by experience that the pigeon end invariably results in a serious loss to the society, even with the treatment accorded to them of which so much grumbling has been in evidence. If any doubts are entertained on this head, they have but to consult with the promoters of New York and Boston associations, the two leading fixtures in the East, for confirmation of the statement. A reference to the catalogue of the Pan-American show will divulge the fact that in a vast majority of the poultry classes a good margin exists from the entry fees paid over and above the prize money offered towards meeting other contingent expenses, whereas in the case of the pigeon department the entry fees in very few instances cover the premiums and the vast majority show a deficiency in even doing that, entailing a dead loss of hire of cages, superintendent and judges' fees and expenses and other contingent payments for clerical assistance, which total up to something like fifteen hundred dollars. The result from a financial point of view should be an object lesson to promoters of combination shows in future and should be a squelching answer to the pigeon fanciers in their clamor for more, more consideration at the hands of the promoters of such institutions.

THE FANCIERS WE MET.

At no exhibition of poultry, pigeons and pet stock we have attended in this country has there been such a gathering of breeders and fanciers. As the saying is, everybody and his wife was there that amounted to anything. In the poultry contingent were many leading lights. Amongst the old school we were pleased to see "Uncle" I. K. Felch and the veteran, Henry Hales, looking hale and hearty. John L. Cost, of course, was there. Whether he arrived in the special fast freight or not that he had chartered to convey the champions from the great Hagerstown carnival report sayeth not. When we last saw him he was awake and looking well, posing in the sunlight opposite the superintendent's office to enable a western kodak fiend to get a snapshot at his portly figure. August D. Arnold, of Leghorn fame, was on hand, but was not showing Leghorns, having gone in strong for the new fad, White Belgian hares or rabbits, or whatever you like to call them. The last we saw of this gentlemanly fancier he was standing in a meditative mood opposite the entrance to one of the shows on the Midway, apparently absorbed in deep thought as to the advisability or otherwise of acceding to the stage manager's solicitations to "have a look" at the greatest show on earth. Ed. Thompson, of "Ringlet" fame, when we met him was soaring still higher, having engaged a valet in livery to wait upon him, and contending that he was the greatest specialist on Barred Rocks in this or any other country. His fee for judging Rocks was $800 and he would not take a cent less. A hustling representative of a western paper thought it a good time to strike "Ed." for a page advertisement, but the answer he got was that he would think it over, but in matters of business he never allowed himself to be "rushed."

Amongst the western contingent we were introduced to a number of fanciers, including Mr. Pratt, editor National Fancier, and Mr. Wright, of Cincinnati, the former busy taking photos of winners to illustrate the columns of his up-to-date journal. George Ewald, of Cincinnati, heading a contingent of warm Pittsburg boys, was much in evidence after he got through with judging pigeons. George was looking well, and with his friends was booming the coming Pittsburg Fanciers' show for all it was worth.

There was a strong contingent of Canadian fanciers on hand, including our old friends, McNeil, Barber, John Crowe, J. W. Saunders, M. T. Burn, &c. We also made the acquaintance of Mr. H. B. Donovan, editor of the Canadian Poultry Review, whom we found a nice gentlemanly fancier in every respect and an exhibitor of some nice White Game Bantams and a nice collection of doves. Mr. Wm Hammill, of Toronto, we also met for the first time. He is a breeder of Game Bantams and Terrier dogs and a frequent exhibitor of Terriers at New York dog show. With this gentleman we spent considerable time in and out of the show grounds and found him a thorough fancier in every respect and a hail fellow well met.

There were lots of others with whom we hobnobbed, but space forbids giving names and doings.

During our stay in Buffalo we paid a visit to the Niagara Falls for the first time and was much impressed with the beauty and grandeur of what we saw there. Altogether our trip to the Pan-American was an enjoyable one and will long be remembered by OLD JACK.

Columbian Wyandottes.

Editor American Fancier: In a recent issue of the American Fancier I note you make rather a derogatory remark about the Columbian Wyandottes, and as a breeder of these fowls I am compelled to resent any such allusion to the breed. I find them fully up to any of the other varieties of the Wyandotte as a general utility breed and in appearance I am sure no one can pass them by without admiring them. They have all the characteristics of the Wyandottes in general, with the plumage markings of the Light Brahma. "Prince Columbia," the yearling cock at head of my pen, is a high scoring specimen, and it is now my intention to show him and "Princess Columbia" at some of the leading eastern shows this season and I feel they will make a very sensational debut. I would like to have every breeder of these fowls send me their name and address and to cooperate with me in formulating a standard and organizing a club by way of creating some interest in the breed by fanciers in general. How about the fate of the Silver Penciled or Dark Brahma Wyandottes?

Mr. Editor, I hope you can find space for this in the American Fancier, and inasmuch as my ad. is already in your paper I feel no one can charge me with any attempt at gaining free advertising. I could not get along without the American Fancier. The show reports are worth ten times the subscription price. May prosperity continue with you is my best wishes.

Arena Poultry Association.

Arrangements have been completed for the first annual show of the Arena Poultry Association to be held at Sterling, Ills., Dec. 26th to January 1st. Judge Chas. McClave, of New London, Ohio, will place the awards. In addition to the cash premiums, a very large and attractive list of specials has been secured. In connection with this show, the American Langshan Club will hold its state meeting. Intending exhibitors should not fail to send for the Arena catalogue. A postal card request addressed to the secretary, L. A. Kline, Rock Falls, Ills., will bring it. Better send for it now.

Barred Rock Specials at Danbury.

Editor American Fancier: We have received three specials on Barred Plymouth Rocks too late for our list, viz.: J. B. Thompson offers setting of eggs for best pullet; Bradley Bros. offer $1.00 each for best pullet.

Buff Cochin Bantam Lost.

Editor American Fancier: My little daughter, Marie Hilldorfer, lost one good Buff Cochin Bantam hen at the Pan American and received one in return that would not make good soup. Now, I don't care about such matters myself as a rule, but when the above is the case I will kick, inasmuch as I saw the hen we got in place of ours at Buffalo, and the party that got ours knows the difference between the two.

American Polish Club Meeting.

Editor American Fancier: A special meeting of the above Club was held at Buffalo, N. Y., on Friday, October 25th, at 3 p. m., 1901. The meeting was called to order by the president, and the following members were present: Charles L. Seely, Afton, N. Y.; R. E. Smith, Afton, N. Y.; B. F. Bryant, Johnson Creek, N. Y.; J. W. Bruckart, Lititz, Pa.; Will J. Kelly, Cambridge Springs, Pa.; Wick Hathaway, Madison, Ohio; George Ewald, Cincinnati, Ohio; M. V. Caldwell, Leetonia, Ohio. The following well known breeders of Polish made application for membership in the Club, and were duly admitted to the same, viz: William McNeil, London, Canada; Allan Bogue, London, Canada; Lewis O. Mayer, Millersville, Pa.; C. C. Paine, South Randolph, Vt.; E. G. Roberts, Fort Atkinson, Wis.; James Lilburn, Emerald Grove, Wis., and E. S. Douglas, Montague, Michigan.

A vote of thanks was tendered Wm. McNeil for so kindly donating the Club $5 cash to be used towards specials at the next meeting and show of the Club.

Arrangements for the regular annual meeting of the Club were left in the hands of the president and secretary as to place.

The regular annual meeting of this Club shall be held this winter, and it was voted that the Association offering the best inducements, should secure the meeting. It was voted that hereafter the American Polish Club should hold its annual meeting first one year in the east and the next year in the west.

It was decided that all special Club prizes should be open to Club members only, and that all must be members of the Club, prior to the closing of entries at the show where the annual meeting of the Club is held, in order to be eligible to compete for Club specials. It was moved by Ewald and seconded by McNeil, that all color disqualifications in the Polish class should be eliminated from the Standard. Carried. The secretary and treasurer was requested to place the same before the secretary of the A. P. A., that it may be taken up at the coming annual meeting, Charleston, S. C., and given proper consideration. The report of the secretary and treasurer showed that the receipts of the Club from February 21st, 1901, to October 25th, 1901, were $47.00. Expenditures during the same time were $27.00. Balance on hand October 25th, 1901, $20.00. It was moved by Bryant and seconded by Kelly that the secretary and treasurer's report be accepted. Carrried. As it was getting late and there being no further business, it was voted to adjourn.

Water Fowl Club.

Editor American Fancier: The annual meeting of the Water Fowl Club of America was held in connection with the Pan-American Exposition Poultry Show, at 12 M., Thursday, October 24th, 1901, in Superintendent Converse's office. The president, T. Farrer Rackham, was in the chair, and the following members were present: Theo. F. Jaeger, Sec., J. Fred. Crangle, Edgar Briggs, E. E. Smith, Charles McClave, W. A. Smith, W. R. Curtiss, M. T. Burn, C. J. Ross, S. E. Wurst and M. F. Delano.

The minutes of the previous meeting were accepted without reading as they had been printed and mailed to all members. The following waterfowl breeders were elected to membership: W. W. Bulette, M. D., M. L. Halloway, J Browning, George Denison, Martin R. Maurer, George M. Gardinier, M. T. Burn, A. W. Hillis, A. G. Oliver, N. A. Shetler, J. D. W. Hall, S. E. Wurst, C. J. Ross, W. R. Curtiss and Mrs. M. A. Kirkpatrick. The report of the treasurer showed the Club to be in a sound financial condition. An invitation from a publisher to make his paper the official organ of the Club was tabled. An open debate now occurred over the question of needed changes in the A. P. A. Standard of Perfection as pertaining to waterfowl. Nearly all present took part, and Mr. J. Fred. Crangle was appointed a committee of one to suggest following changes to the A. P. A., and see if same would be granted to the Club:

1st, that black on the bean of females in all white breeds of ducks be stricken from the list of disqualifications, but be made a severe cut.

2d, that the Standard shall distinctly say that the Call and East India ducks are Bantam ducks, and the smaller they are the better.

3d, that three points cut per pound for underweight in a duck should be changed to two points, to conform with other poultry.

4th, that the Standard weight of the Pekin be raised a pound all round to conform with the Rouen.

5th, that the China goose be declared a small goose, and that the weight clause reads under 14 pounds. This will enable the small, pure Chinas to win over African crosses.

6th, it was the sense of the meeting that white primaries in Toulouse should disqualify.

The matter of official Club ribbons then came up, and it was voted to give yearly five ribbons to each state having ten members, the same to be awarded to the show receiving a majority vote of the members of each state, this vote to be called by the state vice-president.

The matter of the New Jersey Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association offering the State Club trophies in their advertisements of their show to be held at Trenton, was then introduced. Mr. Jaeger stated that these ribbons were a personal gift to the Trenton people by himself, and that they were therefore acting under a misunderstanding in offering the ribbons as Club trophies. The secretary was instructed to write to the secretary of the New Jersey Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association to this effect, and request him to change the wording of their advertisements.

It was further voted that no official Club cups or ribbons could be offered, excepting by vote of the executive committee, and that no individual member be allowed to donate ribbons with the Club name thereon. The election of officers then took place and the following were elected for the ensuing year: T. Farrer Rackham, president; Charles McClave, vice-president; Maurice F. Delano, secretary; J. Fred. Crangle, treasurer. These officers together with W. A. Smith, M. T. Burn and E. E. Smith form the executive committee.

A committee of five were appointed to report next day a list of five judges representing the various sections of the country, and who are officially endorsed and recommended by the Club to all Associations as being capable and acceptable judges of all waterfowl. The meeting then adjourned.

The committee on judges handed the following list to the secretary: Dr. F. D. Kendall, Columbia, S. C., for the South; Charles McClave, New London, Ohio, for the West; M. T. Burn, Tilsonburg, Ontario, for Canada; W. A. Smith, Whitney's Point, N. Y., and J. Fred. Crangle, Simsbury, Ct., for the East. All breeders and lovers of waterfowl are cordially invited to join our Club and help add to the wide spread popularity, the beauty and utility qualities of our web footed friends are fast winning for them. Application blanks and copy of the Club catalogue will be promptly mailed to all requesting same of

ASTHMA CURE FREE!

Asthmalene Brings Instant Relief and Permanent Cure in all Cases.

SENT ABSOLUTELY FREE ON RECEIPT OF POSTAL.

WRITE YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS PLAINLY.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,
Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.
NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,
REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 150th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

American Brown Leghorn Club.

To Show Secretaries and Exhibitors: It may interest you to know that the American S. C. Brown Leghorn Club will offer a special Club ribbon for best cockerel exhibited by a Club member at any show where two or more members are in competition. Secretaries are at liberty to include this in their list of specials. Our annual meeting will be held the week of January 21st or in connection with the big Chicago show, and it is earnestly hoped every prospective exhibitor will join us and compete for the Club honors.

The object of this Club is to increase the interest in and demand for high class S. C. Brown Leghorns to obtain for them better recognition by the poultry shows and poultry press. We offer Club prizes that not only attract general interest but encourage fanciers to renewed efforts to produce extra fine and more nearly perfect specimens, and to use our best efforts to bring about a more uniform understanding of the Standard requirements by breeders and judges. The Michigan State Show.

Every breeder of fancy and thoroughbred poultry in the state should remember that the State show is held in Battle Creek, commencing Jan. 7th, 1902. Every breeder in the state should bear in mind that the Michigan State Poultry Association and the Michigan Fanciers' Association join forces, and will hold what Battle Creek never fails to hold, the largest and most enthusiastic show in the state. Every breeder in the state should bear in mind that a winning at Battle Creek is worth more than it would be at all the other shows in the state. Every breeder should bear in mind the fact that the state show at Battle Creek will be judged by James A. Tucker and Sharp Butterfield, and that a score by either of these gentlemen is valuable all over the United States.

Come to Battle Creek, January 7th, with your birds, and see the best, largest, and most enthusiastic show in the state.

Correction.

Editor American Fancier: I am in receipt of one of the Pan-American numbers of your paper. In looking over the list of awards at the Exposition I find my name as having won 7th prize on Golden Pheasants. This is not correct. I have won six prizes, namely, 1st and 2d Golden, 1st and 2d English, and 3d and 4th Golden. I wish you would kindly correct this error. You have also changed my initials. They are L. V. instead of S. V., as in your paper. L. V. LUDWIG.

The American Buff Leghorn Club at the Pan-American.

A meeting of the American Buff Leghorn Club was held in connection with the poultry display at Buffalo, N. Y., on Friday, October 25th, at 2 p. m., in the Agricultural building. The meeting was called to order by the president, Charles L. Thayer, and was one of the largest and most enthusiastic ones ever held by the Club, there being members present from Illinois, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Canada and Michigan. The members present reported that the demand for good stock has never been better, and that their stock was improving each year. The following officers were elected: President, Charles L. Thayer, Chicago, Ill.; Eastern Vice-President, Harry M. Lamon, Watertown, N. Y.; Western Vice-President, Eugene N. Lacey, Kansas City, Mo.; secretary and treasurer, George S. Barnes, Battle Creek, Mich.; honorary vice-presidents, James Dundas, Deer Park, Ontario, Canada; F. E Olson, Galva, Ill.; C. A. Darling, Hopewell, N. J.; Richard Jones, Venetia, Pa.; B. F. Hislop, Milford, Ill.; George F. Curtis, Fenton, Mich.; executive committee, August D. Arnold, Dillsburg, Pa.; Thomas Peer, Fairfield, N. J.; James Dundas, Deer Park, Ontario, Canada.

The executive committee decided to offer a fine silver cup in each state where there are ten members of good standing, cup to be competed for by members only.

H. M. Lamon moved that the elegant cup offered at the Pan-American by the Club, be awarded to James Dundas of Canada, and the same was presented to him by President Thayer. This is the first Club cup that has ever went outside of the states.

It was gratifying to the Club to notice the grand display of Buff Leghorns on exhibition, and more so when it was discovered that as to numbers and quality none of the old time Leghorns were in the lead at all, and some were far behind. The Club is on the gain and desires to have all true fanciers become members. Send your name in at once and get on the list of membership that will be sent out by the Club to all breeders in the United States and Canada.

The Peoria Show.

The fanciers of Peoria, Ill., feel confident that their exhibition of poultry, pigeons and pet stock to be held December 27th to January 1st, will surpass all past events. Many of the best breeders throughout the state have already promised to send their good birds to this show and some will attend the show in person. The premium list is now ready for mailing and every fancier who shows birds at all should send for one at once. The Peoria Fanciers' Association has been very fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Theo. Hewes to judge the poultry, for Mr. Hewes is not judging at many shows this winter and, as he is known as one of the best judges in the west, his score card on a bird has much value. Mr. Robert Joos will judge the pigeons. He needs no introduction to the pigeon fanciers for he has a national reputation as an expert in his line. The Belgian hare judge, Mr. R. N. Bailey, is well posted on the points of a good animal and we think he will give perfect satisfaction.

In the matter of special premiums the Association has been very fortunate, having quite a large list to offer, among them many silver cups. The hall where the exhibition will be held is one of the best to be found in the state outside of Chicago, and is located in the center of the city which will assure a large attendance. The Peoria shows have always been known as good poultry markets, one exhibitor last year having sold over $200 worth of fine stock, not saying anything of the many others who sold past the hundred mark. Peoria being the second largest city in the state and surrounded by good farming land, it naturally is a good poultry market; for this reason the exhibitors at the Peoria shows always have sold stock. As will be noted, the show comes during the holiday week, which together with the fact that all railroads leading to Peoria will give special rates will, no doubt, be the means of drawing large crowds to the show from the surrounding towns. Taking all these facts in consideration, Peoria is an ideal poultry show city and no one will ever regret having sent their best there to be scored by an expert judge and at the same time be viewed by thousands of people. For further information, address the secretary, H. C. Schwab, care of Dime Savings Bank, Peoria, Ill. H. C. SCHWAB.

The Amesbury Show.

Editor American Fancier: The premium list of the Amesbury show which is to be held at Armory Hall, Amesbury, Mass., December 4th, 5th and 6th is now ready for distribution and is being mailed free to all applicants and anyone intending to exhibit should write the secretary for one The inducements offered have never been equalled by any Association for the popular entry fee of twenty-five cents. A ribbon show, liberal regular cash prizes, two hundred and twenty-five sweepstake and special prizes including cash, silver cups (one of which is sterling silver valued at $40) and merchandise. A special classification for pigeons, Belgian hares and cats. Remember the dates, entries close November 30th. Send for premium list and exhibit at the Amesbury show.

The Chicago Show.

We give herewith a half tone group of the men who are managing the sixth annual Chicago Show. It includes the board of directors, president and secretary, while the secretary of a poultry association is the officer, who most often comes in contact with the public, and is, therefore, the one to whom much of success or failure is credited, yet it is the executive board which lays the plans, makes rules, appoints judges, assistants, etc., that is the real foundation and moving spirit of the enterprise. Upon it devolves much hard work and great responsibility. The Chicago show has steadily grown in size and importance. Its start was made in the little Cyclorama Building, which afforded plenty of room. Now the great Coliseum, the largest structure of its kind in America, is not large enough. Two hundred dollars, raised with great difficulty, was the estimated cost of the first show, but $12,892.36 was paid out for premiums and other expenses for the last. Great has been this phenominal growth. and every indication promises a greater advance in the future.

The American Boy for November (Sprague Publishing Co., Detroit, Mich.) is an attractive number. The stories are: "The Bear Kidnappers of Crow Peak," "A Double Rescue," "Ned's Stratagem," and "The Switch at Mud Run." Among the leading articles are: Working My Way Around the World, by Harry Steele Morrison, the Boy Traveler; Fun and Profit in Trapping; True Americans, and The Old Put House. Under the various department headings are: The American Boys' Club House; How to Make a Good Kite; Shadowgraphy; The Game of Commercial Traveler; Boys' Exchange; Reviews of Boys' Books; The Roosevelt Boys; Fruit Gardening for Boys; The Training of a Pug, and How to Make a Canoe for a Dollar. Eighty beautiful illustrations. Price, $1 a year. Sprague Publishing Company, Detroit, Mich.

GILBERT'S NEW PIGEON BOOK.—The latest and best book devoted to pigeons. Thoroughly American and up-to-date. The author, Major F. M. Gilbert, is world famous. Handsomely bound in cloth. Price $1.00. Free to all sending us two new subscribers.

The Great Chicago Show.

Present indications are that the coming Chicago show will be the biggest poultry gathering the National Fanciers' Association has ever experienced. No reader of this paper who wishes to stand in the front ranks as a breeder of fine fowls should think of passing this show, but make it a point to be there with the best his yards contain, and secure a record on his birds that will be world wide. With a third more floor space in the recently completed annex to the Coliseum building, the Association will have ample accommodations for the increased display that will be seeking honors.

C. A. Damon will serve the interests of both exhibitor and association as superintendent. This gentleman is too well known in the show room as a successful breeder of fine fowls to need any introduction to the fraternity, however to the prospective exhibitor it should be told that he is known among his associates to possess strong executive ability, originality and honesty of purpose in everything undertaken. Having these qualities, coupled with untiring energy his superintendentship should assist materially in making the next Chicago show a hummer. The method of judging adopted by the management is, as a journal states editorially, "a unique one to satisfy exhibitors in the placing of awards."

The plan is simply to allow the exhibitor to decide how the variety he has specimens entered in for competition should be judged, each bird to count a vote, a majority in each variety to rule. This method will no doubt breed a few kickers, but with the truth before us that every progressive step in the world's past history has had to convert numerous fault-finders, there need be no fear that this system of judging the Chicago show will prove disastrous. The fact is that breeders throughout the middle west in particular, are pretty evenly divided for and against the score card, and where you may find exhibitors in one variety strongly in favor of the score card, you will find a majority of the breeders exhibiting another variety radically opposed to it. Anyhow, the method of judging the next Chicago show is in the hands of the exhibitor, hence, do not forget to express your preference when making entries.

Dorkings at Pan-American.

The three classes of this variety, White, Silver Grey, and Dark, were well represented by the leading breeders in the United States and Canada. The Silver Greys led with 40 entries in the single classes and three pens; Whites came next with 20 entries and one pen. The Darks had but 10 entries. In White and Dark classes the Canadian exhibit was about double that of ours, and they were victorious, they having in the White classes 59 points against our 42 and in the Dark 46 against our 26. In the Silver Grey classes, however, which are the most popular in the United States, our Canadian brethren were completely "snowed under," gaining but 24 points against our 149. Their entries in this class were 19 and one pen; ours were 21 and two pens. Mr. Sharp Butterfield, of London, Canada, judged the Dorkings, and in our opinion there is no other man this side of the Atlantic so well posted in this English variety as he, and there are plenty of others who think the same as I. Yet one of his home papers in commenting on the Silver Grey exhibit says that their exhibitors were "verv unfortunate" in that class. This looks like rather a bad spirit to take defeat and surely is not very complimentary to their judge's honesty. We say all honor to Mr. Butterfield's honesty and independence. This is not the first time he has judged his own country's birds in competition with those of the United States, and can be depended upon to place the awards where they belong, whether they go to his friends and neighbors or to some stranger in the United States. Mr. Butterfield was reported as saying that the Silver Grey class was the finest he ever judged. This surely is a fine compliment to every exhibitor in it. I give below a brief account of the winners in the three classes:

White.—Cocks, 5. First, good size and color, fine form; 2d, a blocky bird, loses in color; 3d, about same type, also loses in color; 4th, the largest in class and good in color, but way out in form. Hens, 7. First, much the largest in class and very good color, wins easily; 2d, smaller and more slight in build, very fine color; 3d, good form, but smaller; 4th, good color, fair size; 5th, small and bad form; 6th, nice type of hen, fair size, poor color. Cockerels, 3. First, a very clean white bird, shown in fine condition; 2d, fully his equal except in purity of color; 3d, a good youngster, wants time. Pullets, 5. First, easily the gem of the lot, good form and size and very white; 2d and 3d were smaller and not so good color.

Silver Grey.—Cocks, 8. First, a very large, big boned bird, shown in good feather and condition, fine clear breast, fairly good wing, very moderate top color, bad comb, won by size and condition; 2d, a very old bird in heavy moult; 3d, also in moult; 4th, considerably smaller than those above him and not so massive and low set; 5th, tall and upright for a really good Dorking, fair color and comb. Hens, 10. First, large, great length of body and beautiful silvery color; 2d, is very massive and low set, rather larger than first and beautiful color; 3d, another very large hen, not yet moulted; 4th, nearly same type as third, but considerably smaller; 5th, good big hen, but really a type of the old Grey Dorking as bred twenty years ago and not the Silver Grey of the present time; 6th, better color, but bad form. Cockerels, 12. First, a most handsome bird of good size, early and well feathered, wins easily; 2d, a very large, low set bird, showing excellent quality, wants some time yet to finish feather; 3d, another fine one, not so large nor so good form as second, still a grand good one and sold at high price; 4th, a big heavy boned bird of good color, would look much better if he was several inches lower on his legs; 5th, same type, not so good in color. Pullets, 11. First is a real beauty, all one could ask for in color, correct form, the full standard weight, and lacks ten days of five months old; 2d, is older and some larger, loses principally in color; 3d, is also larger, a very fine pullet, put back on account of inaccuracy in toes, a very serious defect; 4th, nice plump pullet, lacks size and substance of those above her; 5th, mealy breast, eyes and beak too dark, fair form and color; 6th, was unwell, we did not like her as well as 1644, unplaced.

Dark.—Cocks, 2. First, good color throughout, but too tall and short bodied; 2d, much better in form, but same in color as the old Colored Dorking was bred twenty years ago. Hens, 1st, a very large, good colored hen, but too high on her legs; 2d, splendid color and much better form, losing only by size; 3d, in bad condition, looks as though she might have been a good one in years passed. Cockerels, 3. First, very good color, a large heavy boned bird, but too tall and short in body; 2d, better form, not so good color, and smaller; 3d, was unwell, a fairly good bird, but never the quality of those above him. Pullets, 2. First, nice large one of good form and color; 2d, smaller and not so good color. The one pen of White birds was composed of four very good hens and a cock. First pen of Silvers was composed of four June pullets and very fine large cockerel of same age; 2d pen was composed of four early pullets and rather small cockerel; 3d pen was composed of four old hens and an early large cockerel.

To sum up, need we wonder that Mr. Butterfield pronounced these the best Dorkings he ever judged, and very properly they should be, as they were placed in what we all know now was the largest collection of poultry ever brought together anywhere and surely was viewed by the largest number of people.

Black Minorca Awards on Cockerels at the Pan-American.

Editor American Fancier: I notice in your issue of November 9th a notice calling for a correction in the Black Minorca cockerel class at the Pan-American show, where Maunder & Green claim to have won 2d prize over our townsman, Mr. Joseph Hilldorfer. I don't blame them for getting all that is coming to them, but in my judgment they are in the wrong in this case. As I understand it, the class was judged and the cards put up, 2d prize card being placed to Mr. Hilldorfer's credit and let remain there for a couple of days or until Mr. Hilldorfer left the show for home. Then someone (I don't know who) rejudged the class, giving Maunder & Green's bird 2d prize and setting Hilldorfer's bird back to 3d.

Rule 9, governing the show, states that anyone filing a protest must do so inside of five hours and accompany the same with a forfeit. I have failed to see in any report of the show where a protest was filed or any cause for filing one.

The simple fact of one man's bird winning over another is no cause for a protest, and according to Rule 7 no appeal from the judge's decision would be entertained without fraudulent practices have been discovered subsequently. Now, if there was a fraud committed it is due Mr. Hilldorfer and the public to be informed as to what it was and how committed, as there had been none while he was in attendance at the show.

As to rejudging, the judge had ample time to pick out the winners, and when he had done that and placed the awards he was done and had no more right to take it down than he had to take the fowl out of the coop and take it home with him; or, in other words, after a judge has rendered his decision and it is posted he has filled his contract with the show and has no more right to meddle with what has been done than any other visitor, and one who knows his business won't.

As to the American Fancier, it made no mistake in publishing the awards made by the judge when he had the class under consideration, not days after, and that is what your readers want. They don't care anything about mind changers, for many a man changes his mind and then is wrong.

G. WASH. MOORE.

Pittsburg, Pa., Nov. 12, 1901.

Roup.

Now, in saying a few words about roup, I want it to be understood that I go by no man's theories or diction, but would put down (perchance for the benefit of your readers) my own observations and experience. Roup is admittedly the scourge of the poultry yard, and next to it comes liver disease. One has only to look through the answers given by our poultry doctors week by week to inquiries sent to them to become satisfied that if these two diseases could be eliminated from the poultry yard a great load of anxiety would be taken off the fancier's mind. I have here nothing to do with the latter complaint, but on the former I will recapitulate the leading opinions as to its cause. The consensus of opinion is, that foul air is the predisposing cause of roup, no matter whether from overcrowding, foul houses, or what not, and this is aggravated by cold and wet, draughty and damp environments.

Well, this is, in my opinion, correct All the same, fowls which sleep winter and summer in the trees, in sheltered places, will take cold at times, and this cold, if neglected, will develop into roup. My opinion is that a weakly constitution is at the bottom of it all, that once a little cold is taken danger arises, and from that day forward the thing becomes malignant or otherwise, according to unsuitable and filthy, close environments. But against this there are cases where roup so-called seems to be bred in the blood. In the height of summer, with airy houses, any amount of run and green food, and with every care, a bird will some fine morning show you a pudding face, puffed up in a few hours, and by the time forty-eight hours are over he is beyond redemption. The more medicine you give him the more he swells, smells and runs at the nose, till finally in despair you are compelled to give him dislocation of the neck and cremation as the final dose, or you will have every bird about the place soon similarly affected. I call this hereditary roup, not from a scientific point of view, but purely from experimental facts; in a word, because I have ere this bred from a bird that had to be so dealt with almost before the breeding season was over, and his chickens one and all began, on the slightest provocation, to puff up and show the same weakness.

Now in the treatment by our professional doctors there is one thing I could never understand, and, because I have followed them, I have never probably been able to cure a right down bad case. I have tried everybody's medicine, save, perhaps, one vendor's medicine, and have doctored away for a fortnight, given eucalyptus oil and terebine, concoctions of soap, ginger, fenugreek, liquorice, peppers, and what not, but unavailingly; my tender breeds would have none of them, they would die first. In all these attempts I followed instructions given with the medicines.

But all the while it occurred to me that there was one point which seemed generally overlooked. All animal creation is built on common lines. Now, when I myself am out of sorts, my doctor gives me medicine to be taken every four hours, and in exceptional cases every three hours. On our poultry pill boxes we are told, "Give a roup pill every other day, or every day, or twice a week," and so on. The plan I adopted after this idea of administration of human medicine struck me was to wait for the first bad swollen case and doctor it every three hours or so. When the sharp autumn change of weather suddenly came with it came a bad case of swelling. I popped the victim into a pen in the warm stable (only one pony in) and tried a new remedy. I cut the pills into half and administered every three or four hours, bathing the face twice daily with diluted solution of permanganate of potash and feeding on bread and milk. In about a week all trace of the disease was gone and the bird was turned out on the first fine day. Since that time we have had a run of very nasty, windy, cold, rainy weather, but the bird continues all right. This gives one the idea that if a bad case of roup can be cured, the disease, like some human diseases (measles, smallpox, etc.), is shy of attacking the bird a second time, and does it not also look as if the administration of small doses of medicine at regular intervals of three or four hours has a much more even and beneficial effect than a stronger dose, which runs its course for about four hours and then ceases its activity till given again 24 or 48 hours afterwards? But, after all, it is a grand thing to take the disease, like time, by the forelock, and when the birds' surroundings are inclement give them a preliminary dose. In order to help the pills, I am trying a little of the same firm's powder. Instead of corn at night I give medicated soft food, following it an hour afterwards with wheat or dari, so that the fowls go to bed extra well fed and with a little of something to allay feverishness and congestion of the blood.

I have tried the plan but a short time, yet I am convinced of its merits. Remember, I keep Silver Pencilled Hamburgs and Bantams 900 feet above the sea level. Now, good friends, those whom I have had the pleasure of meeting and those whom I have not had the pleasure of meeting, one and all, what do you say? Does the plan commend itself to you as rational, or can we still further improve upon it?—Rev. J. N. Williams, B. A., in Fanciers' Gazette, England.

Cortland Show.

To the N. Y. Members A. W. P. R. Club: Secretary Crangle has doubtless informed you that the next State meeting of the Club will be held with us, during our show. Those of you who were with us last year have decided long ago to come again; we would also like to have the rest of you with us this year. Premium lists will be mailed you about the 18th. Our entry fees are 50 cents on single birds and $1 on pens; premiums, $3, $2 and $1. The Association will pay $10 for the largest and best exhibit in the American class, and $2 each on cock, hen, cockerel and pullet, as specials.

Rev. W. A. Wagner wrote me recently that he would be one of ten to give $5 each for a purse to be given for the best pen, cock, hen, cockerel and pullet in the White Rock class. We have increased the amount to $30; if you will help to make up the balance of this fine purse and thus help to boom our pet breed, please notify me at once. If we succeed in raising the whole amount of $50 it will be divided, $25, $15 and $10. The usual Club prizes will be competed for at this meeting.

I trust that we will have your support in our efforts to make this a memorable meeting and that you will come and get a part of that purse whether you contribute toward it or not. Yours,

E M. SANTEE, Sec'y.

PIGEONS.

Lofty Thoughts of the Editor

Washington show is on this week and we hear of quite a few that are showing, Messrs. Weston and Eustis from Boston and a large number of the Baltimore and Pennsylvania fanciers. From information that is reliable, if this show is what fanciers should make it, Washington is in line for an annual exhibition about this time of the year, and we see no reason why a fixture at this time should not have as large a number of entries as at any time of the year. The old Boston Exclusive led the way while it was in existence and had at their last show over sixteen hundred of the best birds in America on exhibition. Birds are pretty well moulted out now and fanciers are keen to show, and the wait until January as heretofore could be nicely filled in by a good annual show in November at Washington, then Philadelphia in December, and Boston and New York in January. Birds could be easily shown at all four without any harm to them, and should one get out of sorts there is plenty of time by such an arrangement to get them right again for the next show when they do not crowd too closely together.

The management of the Boston show have decided upon A. J. Edwards, of Winchester, Mass., to judge Clean Legs and the writer Muff Legs at their next show.

We doubt if a lot of pigeons such as were at the Pan-American ever were got out in such record breaking time before. At 4 p. m. Supt. Twombly gave the word and by dusk (5:30) there were scarcely two hundred pigeons left in the sheds. There were one or two cases of the wrong bird to the wrong man, but they have all been traced and have found their owners.

We have also one of the finest sets of ribbons yet given at such an affair as a reminder of the glorious time we had. Pigeon men have no complaint to make against the Pan and the people connected with it. They did all they agreed to and more and most pigeon men fully appreciate it, and should a like affair ever take place no mistake would be made with a combination like we had, for none but a chronic could complain.

Isn't it strange that some will talk and write about narrow chested, long feathered birds and when they see a short feathered, cobby bird say it is too small, and yet when put to the test by weighing the short, cobby pigeon is heavier in weight than those that the size is all right but too long in feather? It's a case of the pigeon with a short, hard feather deceiving the eye of a man in a similar way as the Game fowl does a man that is not familiar with their compact and heavy build.

We have heard of more pigeons changing hands (at good prices, too) just before and since the Pan than we can remember for a long time. It's a good argument for pigeon men to support the shows, for if you support the shows their chance for success is greater, and the more successful shows the more demand for show specimens from those who want to show and haven't the goods.

We hear that Mr. K. J. Muir, of Chicago, will not take charge of the pigeon department of the Chicago show. We don't know that we blame him, but eastern exhibitors had such confidence in his ability to care for their exhibits that Chicago was becoming quite the thing. We have not heard who his successor is to be, but we hope that Chicago will not experiment. Give us a pigeon man who fully appreciates the responsibilities of handling thousands of dollars' worth of birds in just six days and handling them in such a manner that they will come again.

Mr. F. L. Weston is offering a cup, to be competed for until won three times, for the best young Yellow Self Muff Leg Tumbler at the American Tumbler Club's annual meet, and Mr. J. R. Stuart, Jr., is offering a cup under the same conditions for young Black Muffs.

The American Tumbler Club has voted to meet at Boston for their annual gathering this winter, and the secretary, Mr. Dutra, anticipates seven hundred Tumblers on exhibition.

Speaking of Tumbler Club meets brings to mind the different members, their location, chances of their coming or, etc., and also the fact that there is scarcely a Canadian who is a member of our clubs. Why is this? We should like to see such men as Mr. Donovan, Mr. Wagner, Dr. Bell and others join hands and come into some of our specialty clubs and show with us, come on to our shows and get acquainted. I am sure it would be the means of fanciers on this side sending birds into some of the Canadian shows, especially Toronto. F. W. GORSE.

Pigeon Hints.

The weather during the last month has been of a very changeable nature, and consequently the reports from the lofts have not in many cases been of so favorable a character as could have been wished. During the earlier part there were many fine and warm days, but these were followed by damp, close and muggy spells with occasional fogs, and these had a most depressing effect upon the birds, and more especially upon the aged and late hatched youngsters that had not yet got through the moult. Then, again, the last week has brought a clearer sky, but it has been tempered with that most trying element the northeast wind, while the nights have been as a rule bitterly cold with sure indications of frost. Taking into consideration these changes, it is not to be wondered at that fanciers generally have had their hands pretty well employed in keeping their stock in anything approaching good health and condition, and those who have been able to do so are to be congratulated on the success attending their efforts. Many, however, have not been so fortunate, nor is it only the young and inexperienced that have been the sufferers, for in some cases fanciers of large experience in pigeon management have been unable to grapple successfully with the troubles and ailments brought about in a great measure by the changes of temperature lately experienced. With the late moulting birds the trouble has been mostly due to want of separate accommodation, where they could be treated specially, and kept warm and out of the reach of the damp and bitter winds; and where they have been obliged to rough it with the more hardy and better protected birds the mortality has been rather high. Then, again, the weakness and loss of limb power noticed last month has still been in evidence, but where prompt action was taken and the remedies recommended were faithfully adhered to, a better state of health and condition was finally reached. Where, however, the patients have been neglected, allowed to stay with the other birds and have been driven about from pillar to post, it is no wonder that they have lost flesh rapidly and eventually been found dead about the floor of the loft or in odd corners where they have endeavored to gain a little peace from the molestation of their more healthy companions. With reference to this ailment, a most striking case has recently been brought to my notice, which proved of what inestimable benefit a tonic can be in giving strength and vigor in cases of this kind. The bird, a rather late hatched one, was found on the ground one morning in a most deplorable condition. It had no use in either legs, and when it attempted to move it toppled over, and even with the help of its outstretched wings could only keep itself upright in a sitting position. The case appeared so hopeless that the owner's first thought was to put the bird out of its misery, but before doing this he asked my opinion on the matter, and I advised him to try the remedy that I have so often recommended in cases of this kind, and that if this did not quickly prove effective, to destroy the bird. He gave the syrup in twelve-drop doses as the bird was of the large kind and repeated three times a day, using a little warm water to administer the tonic. His report at the end of the week was that the bird had so far recovered the use of its legs as to be able to stand, and that it was then commencing to eat heartily, a most hopeful sign of permanent recovery. At this stage I advised a cod liver oil capsule morning and evening as a further means of strengthening, and instead of the three doses a day of the syrup to put a little in the drinking water. This had the desired effect, and after a week of this treatment the bird was able to get about without trouble, and has since thoroughly recovered.

There is, however, a much graver and more fatal complaint that may, and no doubt is, sometimes confounded with leg weakness, and as it is somewhat similar in its symptom perhaps a word or two respecting it may be of service to the young fancier, and enable him to ascertain with certainty which of the two is causing the trouble. The disease referred to is paralysis, and the similarity consists in the want of movement, but even in this respect a difference may be detected if a careful examination of the bird's action is made. When this is done it will be found that the tendency to fall occurs always on the one side, and if the body is examined it will be discovered in nearly every case that only one side of the body is affected, that the muscular system on this side does not act, and hence the failure to support the body in an upright position. In the progress of the disease there is still another difference to be noticed, and that is the gradual wasting away of the tissue on the side affected. It will, therefore, be seen that a careful examination is necessary, and that in describing the symptoms these differences should be accurately stated, and more especially as the remedies for the former are quite useless in the case of paralysis. Happily such cases are rare, but one has cropped up during the last month which was treated as ordinary weakness, and as the bird got worse instead of better, and seemed to be in much pain, it was mercifully put out of its misery. It then came out that the other symptoms had been observed during the latter stage of the bird's illness, and the question was asked if it could have been paralysis that had been the cause of the trouble, and whether a different result might have been looked for under different treatment. The answer to the first was, of course, obvious, but the second was not so certain, in fact, from the extent of the area affected, it was most unlikely that anything done would have given any certain relief or ultimately work a cure, and therefore under the circumstances the best plan to follow was to destroy the bird, and this is what was done. Such cases generally occur in very hot weather; but there are other causes which bring on an attack, such as over-feeding and want of proper exercise, two things that are most often met with in birds kept in confinement, and with young fanciers most of all. The immediate cause may be the rupture of a blood vessel in or near the brain, or it may take the form of a sudden rush of blood to that organ as a result of fright or some sudden exertion. In severe cases the seizure is generally sudden; the bird falls down in a fit, and death results almost immediately. Again, it may take the form of convulsions, but if the patient is kept cool and quiet it may partially recover, and should no further seizure occur may gradually get better. It should be kept in a partially darkened place, fed only on the plainest and most easily digested of the smaller grains, together with some cold water, to which may be added a little cooling saline medicine, such as Epsom salts. As in similar brain troubles, such as megrims, of which I spoke some months ago, the remedy recommended by a well-known specialist may be of great service in such cases as the one under discussion. It consists of a quarter of an ounce of cream of tartar to each half pint of the drinking water. This should be gradually reduced in strength, and if all goes well the patient will show signs of recovery in the course of a week or two Such progress, however, is generally very slow, and even when recovery seems certain the patient for some time afterwards should receive careful attention in the matter of food and proper exercise, or another and perhaps a more serious attack may be anticipated which is most likely to prove fatal. Such an event is likely to happen when the bird is getting on in years, where there is some hereditary weakness or other predisposing cause.—W. Fellowes in the Feathered World, England.

Big Money in Chickens

By Using a Globe Incubator Many Men and Women Add $500 a Year to their Income.

Easy Work and Little Expense.

Any man or woman can raise chickens successfully with a Globe Incubator, and there is a lot of money to be made all the year round by the small as well as the large chicken-raiser. There is always a good cash market for chickens, and the Globe Incubator hatches out healthier, stronger chicks and more of them to the 100 eggs than any other incubator on the market. It is so simple to operate and regulate that any person can handle it successfully, and to day hundreds of men and women, business men, preachers, teachers, mechanics, railroad men, clerks and day laborers as well as farmers and farmers' wives are adding a snug sum to their annual income with chicken-money and without any cash outlay to speak of. There are to day many of the large chicken-raisers who number their profits by the thousands of dollars and occupy whole farms with their chicken-houses and yards who started with one Globe Incubator and it did the rest. Leisure hours with the Globe will produce chickens for family use and net a nice sum of pocket-money besides, every year. Write C. C. Shoemaker, Box 440, Freeport, Ill., to day and he will send you his price list and catalogue of Globe Incubators and tell you free how you can add $500 or more to your annual income in an easy, pleasant manner and not require much cash to start. 26-38

MOUNTAINSIDE LOFTS and Poultry Yards, Mahwah, N. J., Havemeyer Bros., Proprietors; John Glasgow, Manager. Mountainside Lofts at the great Pan-American exhibition added another to their long list of past records in winnings in Game and Variety Bantams. Every exhibit, 30 birds, secured a prize including 13 firsts and 9 seconds; 42 birds and the National Bantam Association special for best Game Bantam in the show, any variety, and this in the hottest of hot competition. The Pan-American was no fall show but a strictly up-to-date high class exhibition. We have a surplus supply of high class stock and show Bantams for disposal (excepting Silver and Golden Duckwings) of all varieties, bred on the same lines as our winners at the Pan-American, that we are prepared to sell at reasonable prices consistent with quality. We sell no stock at less than $5 each, so don't write for any under that figure. We use the knife freely on all specimens not cheap at a five dollar bill and only sell what we know will do us credit and give the purchaser satisfaction. Early purchasers can buy from us specimens that can win in prize money what they pay for them before the show season is over, and have them to breed from afterwards, costing nothing All communications and inquiries for stock should be made to the manager to receive prompt attention. The best criterion of a breeder's stock is consistent winnings wherever exhibited with specimens bred on their own yards, and this the proprietors of Mountainside Lofts and Poultry Yards lay undisputed claim to. 28-37

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15. one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION LABEL FULTON COUNTY No 765

SATURDAY NOVEMBER 30 1901

From the Editor's Perch.

Mr. T. E. Orr, the new secretary of the American Poultry Association, will assume active charge of the affairs of the latter after this week, and we can assure our readers and the fanciers and poultrymen of the United States and Canada that a strictly business administration is in store for them. The annoying delays in delivering Standards, as well as other negligence on the part of the late secretary of the A. P. A., will be things of the past. Mr. Orr is a business man, and as such will do honor to the American Poultry Association.

At the Crystal Palace show, England's greatest, Messrs. Havemeyer Bros., of Mahwah, N. J., scored some well deserved winnings. In Birchen Game Bantams, second on cockerel and H. C. on pullet is a fine record; in White Fantails they were fourth on cocks; in Saddles, Black, Red or Chequered, 1901, they captured a fourth, and in Blue Chequers a V. H. C. In Blues, cock or hen, they captured first and bowl and a C.; in Yellows, a second. When "Old Jack" Glasgow, the manager of Messrs. Havemeyer Bros., reads this he will feel many years younger than he is. The old veteran hoped to get a mention on the other side, but he did not expect the splendid victory his pets achieved.

In renewing their yearly contract, Messrs. Wilson Bros., Easton, Pa., write: "We consider the American Fancier one of the good papers." As the above firm has been advertising in the American Fancier since 1893 and has never asked for a reading notice or favor of any kind, the testimonial speaks for itself. The sterling character of the old firm is exemplified in the intrinsic merit of the goods it manufactures.

The Black Cayuga duck has the name of being the most delicious winter table duck. They are not large, have very bright, showy black plumage, are quite hardy, but scarce in this country from the fact that everything with us is for the white plumage and yellow skin. They are very popular on estates on the other side, where they and the Rouen have the lead. Neither of these ducks is so soft in meat as the Pekin, nor do they become over fat so easily, nor will they make so quick growth.—Country Gentleman.

What's the matter with the Muscovy duck? If a more delicious, meatier piece of duck flesh can be found than the latter, we will chronicle the fact and acknowledge our ignorance. In making this statement we do not wish to detract one particle from the merits of the meaty and excellent Cayuga and Rouen. Both are winter table ducks of a very high grade.

We clip the following from the Nashville American:

Lynnville, Tenn., Nov. 16th.—Eggs are retailing here at 18 cents per dozen, the highest price nearly ever before known thus early in the season. Poultry of all kinds is scarce and high, and in consequence very little is being handled and shipped. Raisers are demanding 6 cents per pound for turkeys, and while some are being brought in the market is dull, and dealers are finding it hard to supply their large Thanksgiving and Holiday orders.

Turkeys have been retailing in this vicinity at 11 to 16 cents per pound, the average price for live turkeys being ten cents a pound. Poultry and duck in the vicinity are scarce while the New York market is or has been flooded with the same and prices have ruled low. Scarcity of grain has induced heavy shipments from the west, which means bigger prices later on when a scarcity of good poultry is looked for by dealers. Eggs in this city are quoted at 26 cents and scarce. The quality is as poor as the supply.

The North Carolina State Poultry Show to be held at High Point, N. C., January 14 to 17, promises to be a big success. It is expected that ex-President Grover Cleveland will deliver the opening address.

The poultry and pet stock show to be held at Harrisburg, Pa., January 21, 1902, will be a big one from all accounts received. The fact that the Pennsylvania State Poultry Society meets in the capital city the same week is an additional guarantee that big entries and a large attendance of fanciers is assured.

For the benefit of many of our readers who are interested in Indian Games, and especially in the winnings at the Crystal Palace show, England, we reproduce the following comments of the English Stock-Keeper on the exhibits:

"Indian Games were quite a feature of the show, averaging over twenty-one entries in each of the six classes, whilst the quality was excellent. Mr. Walter Birch, who judged them, is moreover to be congratulated upon his adherence to the low, square type, and, in fact, this valuable breed has fully retained its prestige at the Palace show. Old cocks (20). — First, a heavy boned, hard feathered bird of the best type, with another real topper close up, as both are good in back, sound in color, and fit for any competition; third, a fair bird, not so classy as the other two, and it must have been a near thing between him and the good legged, short feathered, typical fourth prize winner; fifth prize fell to a very good feathered, weighty bird. Cockerels (23).—First and cup for the best cock or cockerel and cup for the best Indian Game in the show, the best young bird of his type in all probability that has yet appeared, he is as massive as many a two-year-old and brimful of character, and, though entered at £30, he soon changed hands; second, a very useful stamp of bird, but not so weighty as the winner; third, a good all-round promising one, which should be better later on, as he was not so forward as the winner; fourth, very good in color and feather; and fifth, good in expression and color. Hens (20).—First and special for the best hen or pullet, a charming bird of the regular bullock's heart shape, and excellent in ground color and lacing; secand, a well-known winner we fancy, and one of the best type, not quite ready yet, and therefore likely to be better later on; third, good in ground color, not overburdened with bone; fourth, a good-shaped, blocky bird, fit for any show; fifth, not quite so good in feathering, but a smart one. Pullets (18).—First, a nice fresh, lovely-colored, well-laced pullet of great promise; second, very smart, but scarcely up to the usual James Frayne standard, as she is lighter than most which come from this yard; third, a nice low, square built bird, which looks like improving; fourth, good in markings; fifth was thought the unlucky bird of the class, as her shape, style and feathering are so good that it made her out to be much nearer to the winner than she was. The selling classes contained some wonderful bargains, as the public seemed to realize, as a large number of the competitors were claimed."

Light Brahma Type and History.

Editor American Fancier: With the passing of the New England Fancier I thought I would never address another communication to a poultry journal on the subject of poultry; but I see so much lately, especially in the western papers, about Light Brahmas that for once I have thrown my determination to the winds and will have a word to say before the subject gets worked threadbare.

As you know, I am a great lover of these, the most noble of all fowls, and have bred them for more than thirty years and have learned a few lessons that might be of advantage to many who have not bred them one-third or one-half as long and "know all about it."

Last spring there was a controversy in the American Poultry Journal between Mr. McGrew and Mr. Hewes, which pretty clearly showed that there was a difference of opinion between eastern and western breeders and judges as to what was standard properties of these, one of the oldest recognized breeds of pure bred fowls. I must say I enjoyed the letters of both gentlemen very much and think such to be highly interesting as well as instructive. It shows how widely men may differ on individual fowls and each think they are describing the only bird that the Standard really applies to. I became so interested that I ordered eggs from one of the best eastern breeders, also of one of the western breeders, to test the difference, if there really was any to be seen, between birds that were winning in both divisions of the country.

My own birds have all been bred for generations from the highest Boston and New York winners, but I have mingled their blood together until I thought there might be some little difference between mine and the strains they had been bred from. Having quite a lot of chicks from my own birds, I have no trouble at this date in distinguishing the difference in birds from both East and West. I find there is practically no difference between the eastern birds and my own, both having the same general type and color, mine probably showing rather heavier in leg and toe feathering. The eastern type is too well known to need any description from me at this time. The western birds are very distinct both in type and color from the eastern type. They are much longer in leg and body, purer white, and less distinct in strength of black where points are black; they are rounder bodied, heavier boned and coarser in appearance, and certainly lack the style of our birds. And, mind you, both lots of these chicks are hatched from the winners at last winter's largest eastern and western shows and were not selected at hazard, but the very best from each section. I propose to see how the laying qualities correspond between the two types, and I pick the western birds to be the winners. It is a fact I think no one will deny that eastern Brahmas are not the fine layers they were twenty or thirty years ago. They have been bred so long for fine exhibition purposes that the laying qualities have in a great measure been overlooked. The shortening of legs and clothing them in plumage of Cochin character has been very detrimental to them as a general purpose fowl. It is a fact that many prize winners are more Cochin than Brahma at this day. I admit they are much more handsome than they were, but at the same time I am just as positive they have lost their hold in a measure as producers of eggs in paying quantities. I propose to make a cross between the two types—on a small scale—and believe if scientifically carried out there can be made a bird superior to either, but my business precludes the possibility of my being able to do what I would like to do in this line. If I have the time I will try to inform the public through your paper if there is any real difference in the two types as egg producers.

I see Mr. Felch is going to write a book on Light Brahmas. I know of no man so competent for the work, and shall look with interest for its appearance and shall take the first opportunity for securing a copy.

There has been since the first fowls were bred in 1849 a controversy over their origin. Sometimes this has been carried on in a very bitter spirit and common sense has been entirely overlooked. Mr. Editor, there is a way to establish the truth in a measure as to the so-called Chamberlain-Cornish theory or to refute it; it is either a fact or a fraud. Which? Being connected with the Government service for years, I have a knowledge of some facts that shouldn't be overlooked by Mr. Felch, and I hope he may give this view some consideration before he goes too far in his history of origin, etc.

It is a fact that in every port in the United States that all vessels must make entry, and no vessel is exempt from this duty, and this is no new law or practice, but is as old as the Government itself. Now, sir, in defense of the Burnham theory against the Chamberlain-Cornish story, I wish to go on record as saying there is no record in New York of any ship or vessel of any kind from India having entered that port in either 1846, 1847 or 1849, which the bolsterers of that side of the question have successively claimed to be the date of the importation of the original Light Brahmas, and there is no denying the fact that there being no such entry stamps the whole story as a fake and a fraud of the most glaring kind. And again, isn't it singular that if the originals had been from India nothing like them had ever been seen before or since the time of these two birds that had been ruthlessly jerked from their native shores? Some time in the fifties my father secured some birds known as Chittagongs, and except for the pea combs they were so nearly the type of the present day Brahmas there was or is no particular difference between the two—except the difference brought about by many years of scientific breeding and selection. The Brahma has the same type of all other Chinese breeds and plainly shows it to have had the same blood origin, but the fact remains that the first Simon-pure Light Brahmas were bred in Massachusetts in the year 1849. New England Plymouth Rock Club.

A meeting of the New England Plymouth Rock Club was held in Boston last week and it was voted to hold the annual meeting at the Mechanics' Building, Thursday, January 16, at 10 a. m. It was also voted to offer the following specials at the Boston show: On Barred Plymouth Rocks, $3 on each for best cock, best hen, best cockerel, best pullet; $2 on each for second best cock, second best hen, second best cockerel, second best pullet; $10 for best collection of one cock, two hens, two cockerels, and four pullets.

On White Plymouth Rocks, $2 on each for best cock, best hen, best cockerel, best pullet; $1 on each for second best cock, second best hen, second best cockerel, second best pullet; $5 for best collection of one cock, two hens, two cockerels, and four pullets.

On Buff Plymouth Rocks, $2 on each for best cock, best hen, best cockerel, best pullet; $5 for best collection of one cock, two hens, two cockerels and four pullets.

An exhibitor must be a member of the club previous to the date of the closing of entries in order to compete for these prizes. Breeders may join the club by addressing the secretary and enclosing two dollars with application. The club now admits to membership breeders of the white and buff varieties, and fanciers of these breeds should become members and compete for the prizes.

Those Black Minorca Cockerels.

Editor American Fancier: There appears to be some misunderstanding about the awards on Black Minorca cockerels at the Pan, and as Mr. G. Wash. Moore, of Pittsburg, is shooting poisoned arrows at the judge and made some statements in your valuable paper of Nov. 23rd that might lead some who do not know me to think I judged the class over because I changed my mind, etc., and that it was rejudged two or three days after the awards were first put up, I think "it's up to me" to show that neither of the above accusations are true, and after I have "said my say" then "it's up to Burgott" to tell you all if I am a fool or a liar or otherwise.

When I judged the Minorcas (Blacks) on my judge's cards were only four Black Minorca cockerels. I found them, checked them off, and judged them. When I put up the prize cards and returned to the office I was met by a party who told me that his name was "Maunder, the kicker," and that he had two Black Minorca cockerels there cooped among another breed (Langshans, if I remember correctly), and asked if I had looked at them. My reply was: "No; they are not on the judge's cards and could not have been entered." He said they were, and must have immediately went to the office to Mr. Burgott. When I reached the office that gentleman (Mr. Burgott) said he was very, very sorry, that I would have to judge the Black Minorca cockerel class over, as those two cockerels of Mr. Maunder's had been duly entered and paid for, and that it was a mistake made in the office that they were not on my card. I flatly refused at first to re-judge the cockerels, telling Mr. B. the cards were up and there would be trouble if any of the prizes had to be changed; but he told me of the trouble he had had, that he was nearly sick and tired out and it was his fault, and that all should have a fair show that paid their money, and asked as a special favor that I do it for him. I immediately went back, found the two cockerels that I had not even seen, and after handling them left one unplaced and put the other where his merits warranted—in second place. I changed the cards within one hour from the time I had put up the last card on my classes; at any rate, my judging was all done in the afternoon of one day and the forenoon of another, thus proving there was no two or three days between the time the first cards were put up and the class rejudged. I am giving the facts all through, so your readers can see that I am still the same

To Members of the American Black Minorca Club.

I beg leave to announce that the American Black Minorca Club will hold its annual meeting at Philadelphia, Pa., January 1, 1902, at 2 p. m., in Auditorium hall. Through error on our part, we failed to inform the secretary of the Philadelphia show of date of meeting, hence the change from that as published in Philadelphia show catalogue. There will be the largest number of Minorcas at this show ever brought together in America, and I earnestly solicit all members to send in a liberal number of birds to compete for the numerous specials offered by the Philadelphia management and friends of the club. As entries close on the 12th of December, it will be well to send in entries as early as possible. In addition to specials published in Philadelphia catalogue, J. B. Romig, of Reading, Pa., offers $2 cash for 2d hen; C. N. Bliss, Minneapolis, Minn., $1 each for 3d, 4th and 5th hens; C. N. Speakman, Coatesville, Pa., $2 50 for best cockerel. Open to club members only. If you have not received catalogue of Philadelphia show, write James Cheston, Jr., Chestnut Hill, Pa., who will be pleased to send you one.

Toronto Poultrymen Meet.

The regular monthly meeting of the Poultry Breeders' Association of Toronto was held November 20th in St. George's Hall, with the president, Mr. J. M. Wilson, in the chair. The constitution and by-laws as submitted by the executive committee with one or two slight alterations, were adopted. Messrs. D. Patterson and George Whillans were added to the executive committee.

Several of the members who exhibited at the Pan-American were present and addressed the meeting for a short time. Mr. J. N. O'Neil stated that White Minorcas are rapidly growing in favor on the other side and pointed to the fact that at Buffalo in the open class there were 26 Whites as against 24 Blacks. In Buff Leghorns our breeders more than held their own in a hot class. Mr. Dundas won the silver cup offered by the Buff Leghorn Club, it being the first time that a Canadian ever won this trophy. Mr. Daniels was very successful with his Golden Wyandottes, Black Leghorns, Anconas and other varieties, and stated that he considered the exhibit of Indian Games one of the features of the show, and everyone who went to Buffalo agreed with him. Mr. Donovan gave an interesting account of the Bantams, in which he won heavily. While talking over the Pan-American show the question of color versus shape was brought up. The feeling of the meeting was that in some breeds too much attention was being paid to color while shape was being lost sight of. This was particularly noticeable in Barred Rocks —cockerels for instance, while good in color too many of them lack the desirable shape of breast.

Owing to the death of Mr. W. E. H. Massey it was necessary to elect an honorary president, and on motion of Mr. Donovan seconded by Mr. Dundas, Mr. R. W. Hodson, live stock commissioner for Canada, was elected to fill the vacancy.

Moved by Mr. Donovan seconded by Mr. O'Neil, that the condolence of this Association be conveyed to the family of the late Mr. W. E. H. Massey, our honored president. Carried unanimously.

As the American Standard of Perfection is to be revised very shortly, it was decided that at our next regular meeting the matter be gone into and any recommendations for changes or improvements be made and the secretary be instructed to forward a copy of same to the proper parties. The meeting adjourned at 10 o'clock.

American Polish Club.

The American Polish Club will hold its regular annual meeting at Cleveland, Ohio, on Friday, December 6th, at 7 p. m., 1901, and a full attendance of members is desired. All members and breeders are asked to make an exhibit of Polish or Polish Bantams at this show. Our Club offers the following special prizes to be competed for by Club members only: No. 1, silver cup offered for the best cock, hen, cockerel and pullet, White Crested Black Polish, value $10. No. 2, silver cup for best cock and hen, Plain Silver Polish, value $10. No. 3, silver cup for best cock and hen, Buff Laced Polish, value $10. The following prizes are offered by members of the Club: No. 4, J. W. Bruckart, Lititz, Pa., one setting of selected Buff Plymouth Rock eggs for the best cock, hen, cockerel and pullet, Plain Golden Polish, value $4. No. 5, J. W. Bruckart, one setting of White Crested Black Polish eggs for the best cock and hen, Bearded Silver Polish, value $4. No. 6, Will J. Kelly, Cambridge Springs, Pa., one setting of Buff Laced Polish eggs for the best Buff Laced hen in the show, value $4. No. 7, Will J. Kelly, one setting W. C. Black Polish eggs for the best W. C. Black Polish pullet in the show, value $4. No. 8, M. V. Caldwell, Leetonia, Ohio, one setting Bearded Silver Polish eggs for the best cock and hen, White Polish, either Plain or Bearded, value $5. No. 9, M. V. Caldwell, one setting Plain Silver Polish for the highest scoring Bearded Golden Polish in the show, value $5. In addition to the above specials the Cleveland Association will give $10 cash for the best display of Polish, besides other specials. You will miss it if you fail to exhibit your Polish at the great Cleveland show. Write me for Club catalogue and enclose $1, and become a member of the Club. Address M. V. Caldwell, secretary and treasurer, Route No. 2, Leetonia, Ohio.

Poultry Experiments

[At the Rhode Island Agricultural Experiment Station, 1900-1901. Fourteenth Annual Report by COOPER CURTICE.]

I have the honor to make a partial report upon the work in connection with the Experiment Station since my arrival last October. This work has been undertaken in continuance of that already begun by my predecessors, Dr. Geo. W. Field and Mr. H. W. Marshall, upon the mortality of incubator chicks. Preliminary work has led me first into the brooding of chicks, and, second, into incubation.

MORTALITY OF BROODER CHICKS.

During November, 1900, a lot of fifty-eight chicks was hatched for other experimental work, and, this having been concluded, the chicks were placed in an out-door brooder. Within three weeks all but five had died. The cause, as determined from the postmortem evidence, was found to be diseases due to the inclement weather which prevailed at that time. The severity of the change between the brooder temperature and that prevailing outside gave to the larger number of the young chicks lung diseases from which they never recovered. Among these may be mentioned one of the first steps in pneumonia, which gave an appearance of the tubercles, which possibly have been heretofore called tuberculosis, implying that the bacillus tuberculosis was their cause. These tubercles within a few days passed through their various stages into cheesy degeneration, and in the more chronic cases seemed to be in process of repair when the animal died. Other chicks died of congestion of the lungs; others seemed to die of intestinal troubles, probably brought about by the same causes. I noted also that the chicks did not seem to exercise proper judgment in their selection of the food presented to them. Some ate it too coarse; others devoured coarse, fibrous roots; others seemed to have no grit in their gizzards with which to grind the grain.

These conditions led me to attempt an experiment in rearing chickens in a uniform temperature and with their food in such condition that it could be neither too coarse nor too fine.

EXPERIMENTS IN BROODING INCUBATOR CHICKS.

The laboratory in which these experiments were made is a room in the stone building of the Experiment Station. It is fifteen feet wide, twenty eight feet long, eleven feet high, and lighted on the west side by two windows, and on the north by two. The sunlight reaches the interior only through a portion of the afternoon, and during winter often never enters for days at a time. It is heated by steam coils running around the room. The fire is banked at night and started about six in the morning. Being at the northwest corner of the building, during the cold snaps the northwest winds strike it with full force. Early in the experiments no attempt was made to modify the effect of the falling temperature at night, but later on every means was taken to prevent any fall. In order to ascertain whether the temperature of the room was uniform, a recording thermometer was set up and continued for some time. During the first stages the room varied between 90 dg. in the daytime and 60 dg. at night. One or two cold waves threatening, the wooden blinds were shut, and the temperature held up to about 65 dg. or 70 dg. during the night. During some of the northwestern gales, papers were put up against the window-panes in the daytime to prevent the cooling of the air by contact with the cold panes. Double windows were also used for the four windows. During later experiments the temperature of the room was held at from 70 to 80 dg. continually.

The room was ventilated by an open fire-place chimney, in which, however, no fire was made and the draft was but slight. In the early experiments dirt was used for scratching. Later, sea-sand was used on account of its heavier nature and being liable to produce less dust. At one time over eight hundred chickens were kept in the laboratory, and during all the later experiments about four hundred. The dust from the dirt floor once became quite unendurable.

On account of the limited brooder space of the laboratory, it was soon seen that for the larger chickens more room would be necessary and that the floor could be utilized providing the brooders were set sufficiently high so as not to prevent light from the windows striking the floor. In the subsequent enlargement of the brooder scheme six three by six box-brooders were used, and the spaces immediately underneath, partitioned by wire netting, were allowed for the larger chickens. For the use of these larger chickens the hovers were placed on the floor, into which the chickens would go at night. In one experiment over thirty chickens, five weeks old, were kept in the brooder boxes. This number was felt at the time to be far too large to allow of sufficient exercise.

WRITE YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS PLAINLY.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rev. Dr. Morris Wechsler,
Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.
NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours,
REV. DR. MORRIS WECHSLER.

AVON SPRINGS, N. Y., Feb. 1, 1901.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 150th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

The Michigan State Show.

As the show season approaches it becomes apparent that there is going to be a general interest taken in the coming exhibition of the Michigan State Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association, to be held in Battle Creek, Mich., Jan. 7-10, 1902. The past two shows have been held at somewhat disadvantage on account of not knowing just how we would come out financially, but after holding two shows and paying every dollar earned in premiums and specials, this year we promise in addition to a good time to pay every dollar won at the show. Arrangements will be made to accommodate the large number of exhibitors and their birds in a manner both suitable and satisfactory. For further information, address

L. G. NICHOLS, Sec'y,
Battle Creek, Mich.

The season is rapidly approaching when every egg a hen can lay will find a ready market at a good price, and it is to the interest of every man who owns a flock of chickens to see that they are fed from this time food that will produce those eggs. We think it practically a settled conclusion in the minds of practical poultrymen everywhere that green bone is the food that best answers the purpose. In this connection we want to call your attention to the No. 7 Ball Bearing Bone Cutter, made by E. C. Stearns & Co, Syracuse, N. Y. It has a hopper five inches in diameter and large enough to take in knuckle joints without reducing them with an axe. It is equipped with a heavy balance wheel on one shaft and a long crank on the opposite end of the other shaft, the two shafts being connected by heavy gears of such construction that it back-gears the bone cutter three to one, and by this construction the operator is able, by using the long crank in turning, to run the balance wheel at such speed that it requires little effort to run the machine, even when cutting the hardest bone, as the momentum of the balance wheel easily carries the cutter head through any unusually hard substances that it strikes, and with the combination of ball bearings in this machine with the back-gearing above described makes this without a question of doubt the easiest running bone cutter as well as the fastest cutting and most satisfactory machine of its character in all respects that can be secured. Don't fail to get one of the new catalogues sent out by this company. They will gladly send you one free if you will write and send your name.

Washington, D. C.

NOVEMBER 19-23.

The first annual exhibition of the Poultry, Pigeon and Belgian Hare Association was held at the Masonic Temple, 9th and F streets, November 19-23, 1901. The hall, being one of the best in the city and so centrally located, was owing to its location one of the important features which crowned the show with success. Another—its principal—those who had it in charge. This association, composed of about twenty-five members, had at its helm the executive staff: James S. Raeburn, president; John M. Allen, corresponding secretary, and Louis B. duFief, financial secretary, with Frank J. Wissner vice-president and treasurer. Jos. Bardroff was superintendent of pigeons, with E. C. Duffy as first assistant. The poultry and Belgian hare exhibits were under the care of W. Frank Spahr, who acted as general superintendent and also had charge of the office work.

The show itself was a grand success in every respect, thanks to those who were so untiring in their efforts to make it so. This being their first show, the number of entries, while not running into the thousands, were composed of about twelve hundred, made up of nice clean birds, with quality to burn. The Belgian hare exhibit attracted quite a good deal of attention. One of the curios was a pair of huge boa constrictors shown by Mr. Ed. Schmid. Others as well added to the general display, making this one of the many features of the show.

The pigeons contained some crackerjacks, the little Pigmies heading the list as to number of entries and containing the best and cream of the land. We believe it to be the largest exhibit ever penned. Others of special mention were the Magpies, Jacobins and Tumblers. The pigeon exhibit being penned by the Empire Cooping Company made it a fine attraction.

As to the poultry, entries numbered about six hundred, all classes being pretty well represented save Polish and Hamburgs. The Asiatic, Cochin and Mediterranean classes were the largest and of the best. Buff and White Rocks brought out a good lot—in fact, the buff classes all the way through seemed to carry the banner. Black Minorcas were represented by a lot that would do justice to any of the larger shows both as to quantity and quality, the latter predominating. Cochins brought some old winners, seen at our former fall shows, whilst in Light Brahmas the winners of 2d hen, 1st cockerel, 1st and 2d pullets were bred by one of the best breeders in New England. Bantams were fairly represented, the Cochins surpassing as to numbers. Game Bantams—Black Reds, Brown Reds, Red Piles, and Birchens, also Whites—small entries, but quality good.

One of the pleasing features, and more so to the exhibitors, was the fact that the association was ready to pay all premiums the last day of the show, many a one having his check before his birds had left the show-room. Too much credit cannot be given to the officers, Raeburn, Allen and duFief, and those who so ably assisted them in making this, their first attempt, a great success attractively and financially.

American Buff Plymouth Rock Club.

The fifth annual meeting of the American Buff Plymouth Rock Club will be held at Boston, 2 p. m., Thursday, January 16, 1902, in connection with the Boston Poultry Association show. We hope to see as many members as can be present at that time. A fine list of specials is anticipated, which, in addition to the regular premiums, should draw out a large entry. We expect all our former exhibitors and hope for many others. To those not already members, we herewith invite you to join us at once, that you may be eligible to compete for the above. Membership fee and annual dues of $1.00 each should be sent to

Fancy Pheasants and Their Allies.

JUNGLE FOWL.

Four species of Jungle Fowl are known, all bearing a general resemblance to domestic fowls rather over Bantam size. Their carriage is, however, more like that of a Pheasant than that of a tame fowl, the tail being kept low. The cocks have single combs of small size and very long and sharp spurs; the hens are, of course, spurless and are provided with very small combs and wattles when these are present at all.

These birds inhabit South Eastern Asia and resemble Pheasants in their general habits. Of the various groups of Pheasants the ruffed ones (Gold and Amherst) seem to come nearest to the Jungle fowls, a ruff and elongated tail coverts or side hangers being present in both groups, and in them only in the family, but in the form of the tail itself there is a great difference between them, and in this respect the Kaleeges resemble the Jungle fowl very closely. The various species of Jungle fowl are very distinct from each other, although they will interbreed and produce more or less fertile hybrids. Only two are easily obtainable, but all have been exhibited in the London Zoological Gardens, and it seems worth while to treat of them all in detail, on account of their exceptional interest as relatives of the ancestor of our poultry.

THE RED JUNGLE FOWL.

This bird is also called by various authors Gallus ferrugineus and Gallus bankiva, and popularly the Bankiva Jungle fowl, but I have preferred using the name commonly given it by Europeans in India, of which country it is a native, ranging east to the Philippine Islands.

The cock is colored like a black red domestic fowl, as may be well seen in the specimens exhibited in the South Kensington Museum. His bill is dark brown and his legs dark slate color. The face is of a paler red than the comb and wattles, and the ear-lobes, which are only found in this species of Jungle fowl, are generally white in Indian specimens and red in Burmese birds. In June the Red Jungle cock casts his neck hackles and sickles and bears short black feathering on the neck till September, when his hackle and sickles reappear.

The hen has a very small comb and wattles; indeed, the latter are often absent altogether. Her color is the partridge color of the hens of black red breeds, with the same gold and black hackle. The hens of the other Jungle fowl show no distinct hackle. Her legs are dark, like the cock's. The best characters to distinguish the true Jungle fowl from any domestic breed are therefore the Pheasant-like carriage, dark slaty legs very fine in bone, and small comb. Otherwise they might very well be mistaken for small Black Red Game of the old fashioned fighting type. The resemblance is so very close that there can be no doubt that naturalists are right in regarding this particular species as the direct ancestor of all our domestic breeds of fowls, allowing for the variations in color and form which spring up unchecked when the rigorous discipline of Nature is removed and can be so readily propagated by selection. I shall show later on that all the other Jungle fowl differ from the present species in certain points which are never found in any domestic breed, which argues that if they have had any share in forming our tame poultry the strain they contributed has been swamped ages ago. They also have different voices, whereas the crow of the Red Jungle cock is exactly like that of an ordinary Bantam, as I can personally testify.

This bird must have been domesticated very early, probably in Burmah, as the Burmese race is found easier to tame than the Indian. From Eastern Asia it appears to have passed to Europe through Persia, the Greeks calling it the Persian bird, but they were not acquainted with it in the time of Homer, although that poet gives Alector (cock) as the name of a man. But this word merely means "the sleepless one," or "the Wake," as our English hero, Hereward, was called, so that it probably at that time had no connection with the wakeful bird, which afterwards told the watches of the night to the ancients, and it cannot therefore be taken as evidence that the fowl was known to the Greek poet. The ancients, both Greeks and Romans, had a high opinion of the fowl when they did get it, and we know that the latter at all events recognized several distinct breeds at the beginning of the Christian era, including one with five toes, possibly the ancestor of the Dorking.

The only distinct breeds I have seen in India are Bantams from Japan and Burmah and the Langshan and the Silky, imported from China, as also a few European breeds from England and the native Aseel and Chittagongs, together with a curious foreign breed of the latter type from Saigon, which, in its most typical form, has neither ear-lobes nor wattles, but a dewlap on the throat and the neck largely or entirely naked and red in the cocks. The common mongrel fowls of India are mostly like European birds, of all colors, but very generally clean legged, single combed and four toed, although rose combs and five toes do occur. The single combed birds have bigger combs than the Jungle fowl, with, in the cocks, the upper outline arched as in our English birds, not sloping as in the wild bird, whose comb is more like a rather large-combed hen's. The legs, too, are not usually dark and the face is as red as the comb, while the cocks do not moult their hackles and assume the "undress collar" of their ancestor. Thus we see that the fowl has already varied in several points from its ancestor in its own country, to say nothing of the difference of voice, and this without any special selection being brought into play.

I have only once seen the Jungle fowl wild, and then there was a covey, so to speak, of three hens and a cock, and I noticed that the latter bird ran away into the jungle, while the hens took to their wings. The crowing I heard on another occasion when the bird was not in sight. Mr. Rutledge had for some time a cock running about his yard at full liberty, but it ultimately strayed away or got killed. I was able, however, to note personally in this specimen the moult I referred to above. The London Zoo once had a number of these birds at liberty in the gardens, but have not possessed any at all for some time. They bred well and stood the winter in the open, which is curious, for this species is essentially a bird of warm climates and does not ascend the hills into a really temperate climate. Its eggs are pale buff in color. The red color of the cocks varies much in intensity even in wild birds, and a black hen has been recorded among these, but in general the species cannot be called a very variable one, so that it is the more remarkable that its tame descendants "sport" in color so much. When, however, they revert to a wild state, they either go back to the old black red type or show a very marked approximation to it. And few of the Pheasants can, in my opinion, equal that type in beauty of form and color.

THE CEYLON JUNGLE FOWL.

Ceylon has a Jungle fowl of its own, which has the island all to itself, and is not found outside it. The cock much resembles the species last described, but differs in some important points. Thus the breast and underparts are covered with pointed orange red glossy feathers —short hackles, in fact; the secondaries are black, not cinnamon; the throat and the tips of the saddle hackles are glossy violet, and the tail is glossed with purple, not green. Moreover, the comb has a yellow patch in the middle and the legs are yellow. In this last point the Ceylonese bird, of course, resembles many tame ones, but none of these ever display his peculiar breast feathering, and the red Indian bird, when domesticated, develops yellow legs before altering in any other point of color.

The hen is more different from that of the continental bird, having a feathered face and no wattles, very heavy black barring on the wings, and the underparts mottled black, buff and white. The tail is also mottled with buff.

The most remarkable point about the Ceylonese Jungle cock is, however, its voice; the cock's crow consists of two syllables only, commonly rendered as "George Joyce." though some prefer "John" to "George." The cocks often thrash domestic birds and pair with their hens, but there is no evidence as yet that the hybrids are fertile. I have never seen this bird alive, though the London Zoological Society have possessed it, but a fine pair are shown alongside the Indian Red Jungle fowl at the Natural History Museum at South Kensington. It is a curious fact that some authors give the coloring of the Ceylonese cock as belonging to the Rumpless breed.

THE GREY OR SONNERAT'S JUNGLE FOWL

Although very different from the Red Indian and Ceylonese Jungle fowls, this bird lives between them, inhabiting southern and western India, where the red bird does not occur though they meet in central India. The general color of the cock is grey, the feathers, which are pointed, being black laced with grey, and having white shafts. The tail and quills are black, the former glossed with purplish green. The hackles of the neck, the feathers of the flat of the wing, and some of the saddle hackles, which are comparatively short, are tipped with a glossy wax-like substance, formed by the coalescence of the barbs at the end of the feather. These peculiar glossy tips are orange on the wing and saddle and golden yellow on the hackle, giving this a very beautiful and unique appearance. As with the Red Jungle fowl, the hackles and sickles are cast after the breeding season and the former replaced by short dark feathers. The comb and wattles are red, as is the face; the legs are fleshy yellow. The hen is partridge color above and white laced with black below, the lacing getting finer on the belly. She has a small comb and a bare face, but no wattles.

This bird is more shy in the wild state than the Red Jungle fowl and less hardy in captivity. The birds of this species which the Zoological Gardens had at liberty with the red species did not stand the winter so well there, but the species has been kept successfully in England and crossed with domestic fowls, the hybrids sometimes, at all events, proving fertile. But the beautiful hackles are generally lost in the first cross, so that there is not much point in making it. A wild hybrid between the two species was shot in India by the late Dr. Jerdon, but normally they do not intermix—the Red Jungle fowl even inhabiting an isolated wood of sal-trees right in the other's territory. Roughly speaking, the red bird is only found where this tree (Shorea robusta) grows, and he probably keeps his territory to himself, being a very hard fighter. He has been seen to beat a cock Kaleege in a fair fight in the open and has regular fighting places in his native jungles, whereas the grey bird would seem to be of a less fierce disposition—at any rate, several cocks can be kept together even in the presence of hens.

The crow of the Grey Jungle fowl is said to be quite different from that of the Red. I have never heard it, though I have seen a good many cocks alive. I have, however, often heard them utter a note like "koorchy, koorchy," when alarmed by a too near approach to their cage—a noise quite unlike that made by any tame fowl.

The hackles of this species are in much demand for the manufacture of salmon flies, and I am sorry to say a good many birds are killed in consequence. Therefore, if anyone cultivates these birds he will find that, in addition to their beauty, they will produce a marketable article in their moulted finery, and if this can be put on the market in competition with the spoils of shot specimens, as has been done with the plumes of the Ostrich, the Grey Jungle fowl will be relieved from a great deal of unnecessary persecution. So that from more than one point of view this bird is well worth taking into domestication, although less suited for it than its better known relative. Owing to the striking appearance of this bird, it is more often captured and kept than the Red Jungle fowl and so more easily procured.—F. Finn, B. A., F. Z. S., in the Feathered World, Eng.

PIGEONS.

Pigeon Hints.

There have been several bad cases of roup brought to my notice, some of which were among the birds still in the process of moulting, and brought about by a chill through exposure to damp, draught, and the action of cold winds, while in others it was plainly due to defects in ventilation and overcrowding. With the damp, muggy and fog-laden atmosphere we have already had, this disease is most likely to gain headway unless great care is taken to guard the loft against its influence, and more especially as the coming month is noted for such weather. It will therefore be the young fancier's aim to make the loft as snug and comfortable as possible, particularly during the night, but at the same time to see that the ventilating system is adequate to the requirements of its inhabitants. There are, however, two points on which I would lay special emphasis, which are frequently the cause of much trouble and loss, inasmuch as they are the means of introducing roup and similar ailments into the loft. The first is in connection with the internal arrangements of the loft, such as shelves, roosting compartments, or projections in the building placed high up the walls or sides of the compartment, and which come within range of the incoming current of cold air. Such elevations are, as a rule, the most sought after resting places among the more hardy and active breeds, and therefore if allowed to exist the ventilation should be so arranged as not to expose them to the action of the air current, or if this is not possible they should, on the one hand, be placed lower out of the reach of any such current, or the objection made inaccessible to the birds' approach. The second is allowing some of the birds to rest on the floor at night. This, at first sight, may seem of no great danger to the stock, and perhaps it may not be where the buildings have been erected with great care and thoroughly wind and weather proof, but as a rule this is rarely the case with most young fanciers, and more especially so far as the wind is concerned. It may be that the doors or openings into the flight allow a ready passage or current of cold air to enter, and as such air will take the lowest place in the loft there will be a continuous flow of wind or draught along the bottom or floor of the loft or compartment, and particularly where such openings are situated on opposite sides. A little thought on the matter will therefore show that birds resting on the floor all through the night and exposed to the influence of such a current are most likely to take cold, and that in time, if a change is not made, there will be an epidemic of roup and similar ailments among the inhabitants of such a building. Such diseases are most infectious, and therefore it is no wonder that, when once introduced, they should so quickly spread through the whole loft. It may be said that such openings are necessary as a means of ventilation and that to allow the entry of fresh air at or near the floor is the most natural and safest plan, but even if such be the case there can be no reason why the birds should remain on the ground and thus exposed to such danger. Nor is this the only danger or discomfort likely to arise from this practice or want of attention on the part of the owner. There must always be a certain amount of refuse on the floor on which they will be standing, and the close contact with which will not certainly improve the look of their plumage, and more especially should they in the darkness stray beneath some unprotected perch and receive the droppings from the bird resting upon it. The position so nearly in contact with this evil smelling substance cannot be good in any way for their health and well being, and even if no disease is thereby brought about the stock will never be in first class condition either of body or feather. This being the case, I should never, except under exceptional circumstances, advise the plan of allowing the birds to rest on the ground during the night and particularly during the later months of the year. Even those birds of cumbersome body, or whose feather arrangements do not lend themselves to much activity or power of flight, will be benefited by resting at some little distance above the ground by means of low perches, platforms, or blocks of wood. Of course, accidents will happen, and it may be that some birds fail to reach their usual resting places, or, as is sometimes the case, will always show a preference for resting in this lowly position, but in such cases a little attention from the owner will obviate the difficulty, and in time the latter kind of bird will grow accustomed to the higher position and will cause no further trouble.

The plan I have always followed is to pay a visit of inspection to the loft after dark and if any birds are on the floor to remove them to a safer place, or to their usual perch. There is another benefit arising from this plan and that is, it gives the first clue to anything being wrong when the bird is developing some disease or weakness or has in some way been injured, and is thereby prevented from rising from the ground to its accustomed resting place, and which might not so readily be detected in the daytime when the other birds are about the floor. Then, again, there is that most prolific cause of trouble and disease at this season of the year, which has, no doubt, had most to answer for in the present cases of roup, viz., overcrowding. Nor is the young fancier the only delinquent in this respect, for all of us, old and young, at some time or other, if we would only own it, have been guilty of the practice, and more especially after a more successful breeding season than usual. This, no doubt, is the usual reason why the lofts get overstocked at this season, while in others it is done in want of thought or in ignorance of the rules of proper management, and, last of all, some fanciers get so fond of their birds that it seems that they cannot part with a single specimen without quite a struggle. Still, whatever the reason for overcrowding, the young fancier must make up his mind that the practice cannot be tolerated if the stock is to be kept in good health and condition, and this applies equally to birds kept only for pleasure or for exhibition. If kept for the former, the interest in them will soon fail when they become dirty and draggled in plumage or lose their activity and mope about through ill health and are continually under treatment for some disease or ailment, while in the latter case he will soon find that their previous successes will not be repeated, even if they continue in such a state that they can be shown at all.

FRED DECKER, GLENCOE MILLS, NEW YORK.

Clearance of Surplus Stock.—As a start in the thinning-out process the young fancier should begin with the inferior young ones bred during the year, and after a year's experience with any particular breed this should be no trouble to him. He should now with ease be able to distinguish a promising bird from a duffer, and the latter should at once be disposed of, either for what they will fetch, or, if he cannot find a market, to put them under a pie crust. Such birds only take up room that can be ill spared, while by crowding the loft they will seriously interfere with the health and condition of better birds, and the expense of feeding them will in the long run mount up to more than they are worth or are ever likely to be. With some of the varieties whose good points can readily be detected as soon as they leave the nest, a decision as to their quality might have been made long ago, and no doubt in many instances this has been done, but, at any rate, there should be no further delay in deciding which shall be retained and which got rid of. Even where the chief points depend upon plumage and markings, there should now be no hesitation in the selection, except, perhaps, in the case of late hatched birds, and these may be allowed a little longer to get thoroughly through the moult, when they can be judged as to their fitness or otherwise. On one point especially should firmness be exercised, and that is in rigorously excluding all birds, whether old or young, that are of weak constitution or suffering from any disease of an infectious nature. If the latter are to be treated they must be kept separate from the rest of the stock, or, if this is not possible, they should be destroyed at once, so as to prevent the danger of infecting the other birds in the loft.

Care of the Stock.—From what has already been said respecting accommodation and prevention of disease among the stock, it will, I think, be pretty evident that the next month is likely to be a rather trying time, and therefore I should advise the young fancier to be particularly careful and attentive of the wants and requirements of his birds. In the majority of cases pretty well all the birds are now through the moult and should be in the pink of condition, and his aim should be to keep them in such a state. He must guard them especially against the effects of damp and draught, keep them well sheltered at night, and in the daytime, while taking advantage of a fine dry atmosphere to let them out for exercise, not to let them out into the flights or open when the weather is wet and stormy or when fogs are in evidence. In feeding he should not be lavish nor allow any food to lie about and get contaminated and to be very sparing in the use of stimulating grain. —W. Fellowes in Feathered World, Eng.

WHAT! Elliott selling those fine White Plymouth Rocks at $2 each? Why! I have seen birds no better than these carry off the ribbons at Madison Square Garden.—Why! What is the reason? The reason is, that he has a large number to dispose of and in order to sell them at once, he is offering them so low. They are the noted White Cloud strain and are large size, pure white and have good yellow legs, etc. Also some fine Barred Rock pullets, noted Miles Montauks, and a few White Wyandottes and sixty fine beautiful White China Geese. A bargain. Pairs, trios or pens. CLINTON ELLIOTT, Lock box 487, Sag Harbor, N. Y. 27-30

MOUNTAINSIDE LOFTS and Poultry Yards, Mahwah, N. J., Havemeyer Bros., Proprietors; John Glasgow, Manager. Mountainside Lofts at the great Pan-American exhibition added another to their long list of past records in winnings in Game and Variety Bantams. Every exhibit, 30 birds, secured a prize including 13 firsts and 9 seconds; 42 birds and the National Bantam Association special for best Game Bantam in the show, any variety, and this in the hottest of hot competition. The Pan-American was no fall show but a strictly up-to-date high class exhibition. We have a surplus supply of high class stock and show Bantams for disposal (excepting Silver and Golden Duckwings) of all varieties, bred on the same lines as our winners at the Pan-American, that we are prepared to sell at reasonable prices consistent with quality. We sell no stock at less than $5 each, so don't write for any under that figure. We use the knife freely on all specimens not cheap at a five dollar bill and only sell what we know will do us credit and give the purchaser satisfaction. Early purchasers can buy from us specimens that can win in prize money what they pay for them before the show season is over, and have them to breed from afterwards, costing nothing. All communications and inquiries for stock should be made to the manager to receive prompt attention. The best criterion of a breeder's stock is consistent winnings wherever exhibited with specimens bred on their own yards, and this the proprietors of Mountainside Lofts and Poultry Yards lay undisputed claim to. 28-37

PAN-AMERICAN WINNERS—Three out of four possible firsts is the phenomenal record made by our Rose Combs. Six birds entered; six awards. Blacks—1st and 4th cock, 1st hen Whites—1st cock. 3d and 4th hens. A few of the prize winning kind in each variety for sale. POLLARD BROS., Rutland, Vt. 28-30

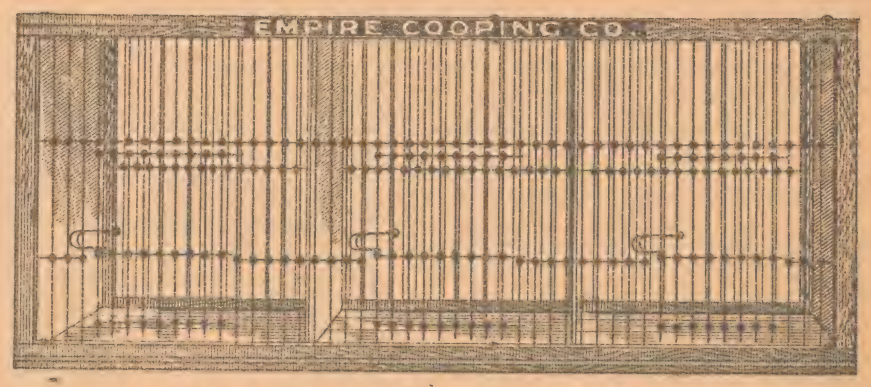
DEBONAIR BANTAMS. We've Got 'em Sure.



More of those STAY BLACK Black Cochin Bantams, and BETTER ONES than ever before. That at least means, those good enough to win at shows like New York, Rochester, etc., as we have bred such winners on several occasions; 100 of them. We never raised as many Wh. Polish Bantams in one season before, ALL with V combs and blue legs. We also have Golden and Silver Sebrights and Brown Red Games.

DEBONAIR BEAGLE HOUNDS.

60 of them old enough to hunt this fall; some of them hunting now and LOTS OF THEM fit to show in ANY COMPANY. All full pedigreed. Prices right for quality.

MUFFED TUMBLERS FOR SALE.

WINNERS IN ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

The grandest collection of winning Muffed Tumblers ever gotten together is now on sale, and can be seen by appointment and birds selected. I will sell any Muffed Tumbler I own and arrangements can be made to take the entire lot. The varieties are Blue Saddles, Black Badges, Black Mottles (Yellow Rose cock, 1st Boston and Chicago, price $15. one of the best living) and several other odd birds, all winners or will produce winners. My Tumblers possess characteristics peculiarly their own, having been bred carefully for years, and are streets ahead of any other strain. In the past five years I have bred more winners than all others combined. Stock birds sold to others have bred their best birds; why, then, waste time and money by breeding from ordinary stock, when for an ordinary outlay the best birds living can be obtained? Those who would like to win and breed winners are invited to correspond. Prices very low, but nothing in muff legs under $5 per bird. (Some as low as $2.50 in surplus Clean Legs.) Testimonials from dozens who have purchased winners in all parts of the country. Satisfaction guaranteed. State wants fully. See winnings at Birmingham, Eng. (1st and medal), Boston, Chicago and New York. While winning here I had a team of six winning at Birmingham, Eng., the greatest Tumbler show in the world, irresistible argument as to the quality of my stock. 48tf

SATURDAY DECEMBER 7 1901

From the Editor's Perch.

Two great shows "are on" this week —Cleveland, Ohio, and Hartford, Conn. Reports of both will appear in our issue of December 14.

Ira C. Keller, Prospect, Ohio, the king of Golden Wyandotte and Sebright breeders in the Buckeye State, is in fine trim for the coming campaign, having a lot of winners to show and sell.

Mr. W. E. Samson, of Pleasant Mount, Pa., is a Silver Wyandotte breeder of the good old school. He believes in his pets and his faith in them has never wavered. For many years the Samson Silvers have been at the leading shows and won their share of the honors. Win or lose, Mr. Samson is always the same genial, thoroughbred fancier his friends know him to be. In a recent letter he writes:

"I appreciate your kind words for the Silvers. I have bred them since '86, when I fell in love with them at first sight, and have never ceased to love nor ever regretted that they were my choice. I have never seen them equalled for winter laying; have had them lay five days in succession in the coldest winter weather, and I live in about the coldest place on earth. Fourteen pullets laid 249 eggs in February; 35 hens and pullets 775 eggs in January, and you know the markings and size of my strain."

Mr. E. N. Morris, Fawn Grove, Pa., sends us the following:

"Enclosed find a saddle feather from a S. C. Brown Leghorn cockerel (pullet bred). He is bred from my 2d Hagerstown hen and sired by a cockerel full brother to 1st, 2d and 5th pullets at New York, 1901. He is pure Geo H. Morris strain. You will notice the fine pencilling in this feather, almost equal to a female. This cockerel will be one of my pullet breeders the coming season."

We like to read such letters and appreciate the intelligence and fancier-like spirit of the writer. The feather is a fine one, and no doubt the matings of Mr. Morris will justify his faith in the strain of blood that has built up his Brown Leghorns.

The South Carolina Inter-State and West Indian Exposition opened Monday, December 2. It is the most important function of its kind the South has ever held, and the indications are that it will prove an unqualified success.

The poultry, pigeon and pet stock exhibit at Charleston will not occur until January 24, and northern fanciers should not fail to be represented there with stock. It comes just after the big shows in the North are over, and a trip South will not hurt the birds at that season of the year.

The possibilities of southern poultry culture are far greater than the present condition of the industry indicates. The time must come when the South will prove the producing point of thousands of dozens of eggs, that should find a ready market in the North during the months when prices for hen fruit rule high. But there must be a change in tariff rates of the express companies before a profitable business can be established between shipper and seller.

There is no more popular fowl than the White Plymouth Rock. This popularity has come to them gradually, and is the result of truly deserving quality. It is often stated that the White Plymouth Rock and the White Wyandotte are the same fowl, excepting the comb. This is not the case in many respects. One of the most marked differences is that the White Plymouth Rock lays the larger egg of the two; this is a valuable difference in favor of the Plymouth Rock. The same difference exists as between the Buff Wyandotte and the Buff Plymouth Rock. Plymouth Rocks of all varieties lay larger sized eggs than do the Wyandottes "—T. F. McGrew in the Country Gentleman.

The writer of these notes must respectfully protest against certain statements in the above. Granting all the good words said of Plymouth Rocks to be true, we wish to inquire where the Hon. Thomas F. McGrew got his authority from that claims "Plymouth Rocks of all varieties lay larger sized eggs than do the Wyandottes." Is it in the comb of the Buffs? We ask this because both Buff Rocks and Wyandottes have been bred from the same mating. We also wonder whether Single Comb Silver, White and Golden Wyandottes lay larger eggs than the proper rose comb varieties! We would like a few really authentic facts on this matter. Perhaps Mr. Geo. E. Howell, who is experienced in this egg business by many years' association with it as producer and lately as buyer, can give us a few real facts without injuring the popularity of the two great American breeds a particle.

Our venerable old friend, Mr. I. K. Felch, whose good work for the American fancy we will always remember even when we must take issue with him on matters that "pertain to living issues," makes the following comments on apparently existing evils in the latest issue of our esteemed contemporary, Farm-Poultry:

"Judging sticks and too small coops have no business in an exhibition room, except the former in the Game classes, where there is danger of being spurred. There is no use hitting any Asiatic on the back to make him pose at his best. Put your hand in and gently scratch his throat, especially if he is a Langshan, and you will secure the specimen's most fetching attitude."

Judging sticks are all right and small coops are all wrong. Everybody knows that who has studied the question intelligently. In stating this we agree and disagree with Mr. Felch, and the disagreement is on the "judging stick." If the latter is good for Games, it is good for other varieties. But we do agree with him most heartily when he says: "Put your hand in and gently scratch his throat, especially if he is a Langshan, and you will secure the specimen's most fetching attitude." Now, old friend, how many birds can you, the prince of the speedway in scoring, judge in a day by following your most excellent conviction?

We read further on and "Uncle Isaac" writes:

"If you care to kill a cockerel's chances to win, tap his saddle, if a Cochin, or hit his hips with a heavy silver judging stick, if a Brahma, thus knocking down the saddle of former and causing the latter to 'scrooch,' draw up his breast plumage into a ridge between breast proper and body, drop his tail, and crook his legs. Then pass on with the satisfaction, in a comparison show, of having destroyed the specimen's chances to win, you having knocked him out of the competition by your ill treatment."

This is awful, and advocates of comparison judging should shiver in their boots. The only thing that worries us is: What misguided judge is using a silver judging stick? Most of the judging sticks are made of brass and a few are made of wood. That probably fills the bill, as a comparison judge must have brass and possibly a wooden head to meet his fate. Still, he can be very gentle with birds and not make them "scrooch," for the simple reason that he is not obliged to score 'steen hundred in a few days to pick the winners.

We read on further and omit Mr. Felch's "digs" at comparison judging and "silver judging sticks" until we come to the following condemnation:

"But a worse evil than this, and one that has an evil influence out of, as well as in, our exhibitions, is the twenty-four inch square coop. Such coops are not large enough for our Brahma. 'It is perfectly useless to show in a Spratts coop in a comparison show anything but Cochin shaped Brahmas, with short legs, short necks, short backs, and short and wide tails.' I had the above fired at me, with this added: 'One has got to raise two kinds to compete in comparison and score card shows.' Why all this? Simply because the Asiatic coops are not large enough for standard shaped Brahmas. The males cannot stand up without hitting their heads, and this causes a bird to duck his head and crook his leg—'cow-hocks' him. They are not wide and deep enough so that beak and tail do not hit, and up goes the tail over the back. A drop line from deck feather to ground no longer clears the tail feathers proper, and with the neck out of position all this utterly ruins his natural shape, when, had the bird been cooped in a thirty or thirty-three inch cube for a coop he might have been the admiration of the visiting public, as were the Langshan cocks shown by Cutting a few years ago in a double turkey coop, where they stood free and clear and natural."

It is a strange fact that the best Brahmas and Langshans in the last decade have been judged in Spratts coops, and it is also a very strange fact that hundreds of "crack" Brahmas have been judged in coops that were not fit for a common dunghill fowl. We know whereof we speak, and we also remember the Cutting Langshans. The fine loose feathered cockerel exhibited at Philadelphia and New York in the early nineties by "Bob" Colt, Mr. Cutting's manager, was shown in Spratts coops and he looked extremely well. We do not write this in defense of Spratts coops, but in the interest of justice and for the good name the poultry judges of America have in knowing how to judge birds sans cooping environment.

Mr. F. W. Babcock, of New Haven, Conn., is offering the Greeley Roup Cure for sale. He has the endorsement of some of the best fanciers of New England and other sections of the United States, who speak very highly of the medicine. It certainly deserves a trial.

Some Things We Want in Barred P. Rocks.

Editor American Fancier: I am aware of the fact that there is a wide difference of opinion among breeders of this variety as to what is the right shade of color for exhibition specimens. First, let me mention shape. Keep your eye on this section both in your matings and in your choice of show stock. Stick to the Rock type, and this is what we consider the true shape or the shape that will win with good color. We like the male standard in size, an active bird with plenty of style, one that seems to be nervous, always on the move. They make the best breeders and show better in the exhibition coop. Neck too long for Wyandotte, back also not as sharp in concave sweep to tail, body should be good length compared with size of bird, but not as long as seen in Brahmas or as short as should be in a correct shaped Wyandotte; a trifle longer or higher up on legs, but not stilty or out of proportion; tail is longer than Wyandotte and should not be carried high like a Leghorn or low like a Game.

It is not my object to tell breeders or judges what is standard, but I am sure there are many birds raised and shown that are decidedly Wyandotte in shape. This will apply to all Rocks. My opinion is a bird with good Rock shape should win over one having better color; of course, we want them as good in both sections as possible.

Now, in regard to color. Here is where so many differ. I think too many breeders, as well as some judges, let under-color carry too much weight in placing awards. In my opinion, under-color does not constitute half of color. Surface is what we see on first glance and what we see at all times. A clean bright surface, well finished, that shows line barring to a marked degree, free from smut or rusty surface, if not strong in under barring, and if not cottony, should have preference over strong under-color with cloudy surface, other sections being equal, such as wing, tail and minor sections. If breeders and judges would give such specimens preference in the show-room and breeding pen they would be improving the breed, and there might be some chance of getting show specimens from one mating in time, and probably in a short time.

Would like to hear from others who champion this grand old breed.

M. E. WURTS.

Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 27, 1901.

Poultry Show and Institute at Rome, N. Y.

The poultry institute and show were very largely attended on Friday evening, and among those present were a large number of Rome's business men. The first half hour of the institute was devoted to answering questions which had been deposited in a box on the conductor's table.

One of the most important of them was "How long can a hen be kept for profit?" Mr. Davenport said he thought two to two and a half years was the extreme limit. Dr. Santee said that the second year was the best life of the hen, although the breed and the purpose for which the fowl was kept might have something to do with it. Mrs. George E. Monroe preferred the pullet.

In the discussion which followed the suggestions it was argued that the pullet which began to lay in the fall would exhaust its vitality by late spring and although it would be a good breeder it might not be supplying eggs. One reason why a fowl was better in the second year was that you had had a year to cull out the poor birds and before the second year had much more than commenced you would have sorted down to the best of the lot.

Another question was, "would you advise the cold storage of eggs?" Mr. Davenport essayed an answer to this. He related the experience of Senator Stewart of Ithaca, who has 500 hens and when eggs sold at 12 to 14 cents a dozen recently he cold storaged them and obtained 20 to 22 cents for them a little later. He said that many hundreds of dozens of eggs sold in New York city are incubator eggs. That is they had been placed in the incubator for chicken hatching and when the first test was made at the end of five days there were some eggs taken out, and it was from that circumstance that they derived their name. The speaker said eggs may be preserved indefinitely for about a cent a dozen by the use of sodium silicate. The mixture is prepared eight parts of water to one of silicate. Care must be taken to have the eggs fresh. The eggs can be dropped into the mixture as they are obtained and left there until wanted to use, but when taken out must be used at once, or the eggs can be dipped one day and then given a second dipping the next day and allowed to dry. The mixture makes a regular coating of water glass on the egg-shell and they will keep for any time. The eggs will taste somewhat if boiled. This recipe the speaker had used and considered the best thing for that use.

Dr. Santee coincided with the previous speaker, as he had had considerable experience in the use of the mixture.

Mr. Davenport was the next speaker and gave a very interesting talk on the judging of fancy poultry, illustrating it by the use of two Black Minorcas. He said that the perfect bird had never yet been found, but there were some birds which were perfect in some points and by the use of these points the judge could imagine what the absolute perfect bird would be like. The first thing a fancier looks for is the disqualifications which the bird possesses. Feathers on the legs of what should be a clean leg bird, or feathers between the toes are important points of disqualification. The speaker then told of a well known local fancier who had some birds entered at this show, as also did a friend of the fancier. The fancier wanted his friend to stand some chance of obtaining a premium so he looked over his birds to see if they were ready for show, well groomed, etc. In one of the birds he found feathers between the toes and called his friend's attention to the defect and explained to him the importance of being clear from them. When the awarding of prizes began and the judge came along down to where the fancier's own stock was located and examined his birds the very first bird was disqualified for the defect against which the fancier had cautioned his friend. He had neglected to look his own birds over, although he knew the importance of doing so.

E. S Comings, connected with the Commercial Poultry of New York and Chicago, was present and in response to an invitation gave a talk on scoring by card. He used as an example one of the Black Minorcas which had been disqualified. In his talk he explained carefully every point to be considered in judging a bird in that way and gave the number of points, half and quarter points which he deducted for imperfection in the bird. When completed the bird showed a rating of 88 out of a possible 100. The talk was one of the most interesting of the institute that has yet been given.

The last speaker of the evening was Hon. Thomas F. McGrew of New York, poultry editor of the Country Gentleman of Albany. His address was "Poultry Talk," and he illustrated it by about thirty-five handsome stereopticon views shown by the oxy-hydrogen light. The views were thrown on a screen 12 feet square, and showed the colorings of the different birds perfectly. Among the views shown was one of wild fowls found in the jungles of the West Indies a thousand years ago. The speaker called attention to their colorings and peculiarities of plumage, shape, carriage, etc., and then showed pictures of fowls running down along the ages and pointed out characteristics which could be traced back to the jungle fowls. The speaker also displayed several poultry houses and a number of the Pan-American prize winners. Mr. McGrew is a very pleasing speaker and tells what he has to say in a narrative form which holds the closest attention of his audience from start to finish. This was the first illustrated lecture ever given, and although he was disappointed in not having a number of his slides completed in time for use here, it was a most interesting display. At the conclusion of his talk he was greeted with the heartiest applause.

Dr. A. A. Brigham of Ithaca, formerly in charge of the Agricultural Experiment Station at Kingston, R. I., was the speaker at this morning's session of the institute. His talk was along the subject of incubating and brooding, and he went into a discussion of the conditions which surround a successful hatch of chickens by the incubator. The temperature, oxygen and amount of vapor in the air furnished in the machine were all considered by him. He thought the hot air incubator was to be prefered to the hot water system. Passing to the brooder he said that the young chicken should have a place where he could run in and out of a yard and get warm and then go out again for more exercise. They should be provided with plenty of grit and their food should be granulae. They should have no wet mixed foods. There should be a sun yard provided for the little chicks, one where they could run out under a glass frame and be protected from all winds. Cut oat straw should be provided for them to scratch over in order to get their feed.

At the Poultry Institute's closing session this afternoon the question discussed was, "The Best Poultry House and How Made." It was opened by Dr. Santee who said in his building he had about 300 birds. It was 92 feet long and had 10 coops of 30 birds each. The foundation was dug down two feet but in a graveley soil he would not dig down at all. The divisions are eight feet wide and sixteen feet long. The dropping boards are on the north end of the coop and are 30 inches from the floor. The partitions are, with two exceptions, solid and he likes them better than those of wire. Plenty of light and air are given the fowls. The roof has the two slants from the ridge and is cheaper and easier to warm. The floor has holes cut through so the birds can go down an inclined board to the dirt cellar below. The flooring of the building has about one-half inch of sand on it and then is thickly covered with straw. The speaker did not believe in the use of the extra sharp grit as it must injure the lining of the gizzard and preferred the grit that acted more as a grinder or mill stone. He found the coral grit most satisfactory.

G. L. Reider said each man built his house according to his time and place and to fit his purse His house is on a coarse gravel, and is excavated about two and one-half feet. It has a cement floor.

His dropping boards, roosts or perches, and nests are removable for cleaning purposes. The partitions are of wire. He makes it a practice to water after feeding and empties all the dishes at night. In cold weather the water is warmed somewhat before being given to the fowls.

Conductor J. E. Rice said all poultrymen in building their houses are after the same three essential things, and it was only a difference of opinion how to best adapt them to their needs and location. They are all seeking after: First, sufficient warmth; second, dryness, and lastly, plenty of sunlight and pure air.

Mr. McGrew then gave an address on "Fitting Birds for the Show Room."—Rome Sentinel of Nov. 30th.

Following are the poultry show

The Minorca Judge at Philadelphia.

Editor American Fancier: I notice that Mr. Story, in your issue of Nov. 16th, "analyses the vote," that is the vote of the Minorca Club for judge of the Minorca class at Philadelphia. As Mr. Story's present statement of the vote does not differ from the vote as I gave it except that I refrained from giving the 2d and 3d choice and thus avoided showing that Mr. Story was voted for as 2d or 3d choice of 16 members while he was the first choice of only 7 out of the 61 who voted. I will not criticise that part of his analysis except on one point, namely, he is mistaken in thinking that 1st, 2d and 3d choice was only a matter of the order in which the names were written and that the votes were cast "at random." Most of the Minorca Club members know what they want and vote accordingly, and I have the proof that many of them did understand that they were voting for their 1st, 2d and 3d choice, because I have personal letters from them telling me that they had voted for me as first choice and for others as second and third choice. Others wrote me that they had voted for Mr. Zimmer as first choice and for me as second choice. I freely forgive Mr. Story for making the vote for himself appear more insignificant than I did, and I trust that in the effulgence of his human kindness and his peace loving nature, he will be able to pardon himself for any chagrin which he may feel under the strong light of his latest article.

But before closing his article, Mr. Story with plain design to carry out his first attempt to make me appear guilty of dishonest judgment, says: "In 1899 Mr. Northup judged Minorcas at Philadelphia; it was common report, not denied by Mr. Northup at the time, that he sold the cock that won first prize under his own judging. Here is where he erred and someone else suffered. I will not go further into the merits of the judgment in this case, but will say that the bird was shown at New York the same winter, about two months after, without being placed."

Far from "not denying," I was the first to make it known that the bird was one which I had sold. I sold the bird about a month before the show, and had no idea that he would be shown at Philadelphia, until I found him on exhibition there. Immediately on recognizing the cock, I went to the secretary of the show and told him the circumstances and asked him to let another man judge the Minorca cocks. He refused, and gave as one of his reasons for wishing me to judge the entire class, that a certain Minorca breeder from the vicinity of New York city, had requested him by letter, to cancel his engagement with me, promising a large exhibit if I was dropped from the list of judges and threatening to use his position in the Black Minorca Club to prevent entries in the Minorca class if I was retained. The secretary of the show did not wish even to appear to grant such a request by allowing anyone else to place awards on any part of the class, and he told me to give the bird just the place it deserved. Accordingly I went on and judged the class, found the bird I had sold justly entitled to first place which I gave him, not "erring in judgment," and if anyone "suffered" it was not from injustice. Fortunately the editor of Farm Poultry recognized the excellence of the cock bird to which I had given 1st prize and selected him from all the Minorca winners to have a cut made from, which cut was published on the first page of Farm Poultry, December 15th, 1899, where it can still be seen by anyone who has a file of that journal. The owner of the second prize Minorca cock thought his cock had the best comb and lobe, and felt that he ought to have received first for that reason, but I showed him by the Standard, comparing the birds side by side and taking each section separately, wherein his bird was deficient and the other sufficiently superior to entitle him to 1st prize. The man seemed perfectly satisfied and several other judges said that the awards could not have been placed differently in justice to all competitors, but I told the owner of the 2d prize cock that I would be glad to have him make a protest if he was not perfectly satisfied and that I would pay the forfeit ($5) out of my own pocket if he could not sustain the protest. I made this offer because I desired an opportunity to dispel any possible shadow of doubt as to my correctness in making that particular award, and was willing to pay $5 for the privilege. The same cock which I awarded 1st at Philadelphia won 1st at Boston a little later over a cock which had been greatly praised in the journals and pronounced by Judge Butterfield to be the finest Minorca cock out that winter. No wonder Mr. Story "will not go further into the merits of the judgment in this case." It would have spoiled his story to have told the whole truth, but if anyone wishes to go further into the details I am well prepared to defend my position. All the proof which Mr. Story gives or can give against the bird is that he was shown at New York two months later and failed to get a place. When the bird was shown at New York he was all out of show condition having been nearly worn out with repeated showing since I judged him at Philadelphia. But judge J. D. Nevius who placed the awards at New York in the class where the bird in question failed to get a place, was one of the judges who examined the birds at Philadelphia and pronounced my judgment correct after the owner of the 2d prize cock had questioned the awards. Any fancier of experience ought to know that the fact of a bird winning at one time and failing to win at another time, is no proof of injustice being done in either case to say nothing of two months having elapsed between the shows.

Unfortunately, as I have been informed, several who have been the Club's largest exhibitors in past years have been unfortunate with their young stock this season and consequently cannot exhibit largely if at all, but the rivalry will be great among new exhibitors. There was never before a promise of so large an exhibit of Black Minorcas at the Club's meeting as there is this year, nor as great value offered in specials. New members are taking advantage of the position to strive for supremacy and are sparing no pains to make their exhibits a credit to themselves and the breed, seeing that they will get more honor, more advertising advantage and more money by winning even a fourth prize at Philadelphia than anywhere else they can exhibit this winter, and the fortunate owners of Minorcas capable of winning 1st, 2d or 3d prizes at Philadelphia, can be certain of unlimited advertising advantages and specials of great value in addition to the regular prizes.

The indications are that the coming annual meeting will be the largest and most interesting in the history of the Club thus far. Much credit is due to Secretary Blanton for his tireless efforts in its behalf. Many new members have been added to the Club, many applications for membership are being sent in and the Club has never made so great progress in the same length of time as in the present year.

In closing his article, Mr. Story asks in more of his touching verses and with more than his accustomed pathos, that we give him the "winning vote." If he will kindly let us know what position he is candidate for, I for one, will be glad to consider it. If it is for Club poet, I promise here and now to support him both with vote and influence. He stands without a rival for that position, and how could Minorca interests be more enhanced than to have some of his poems appear in some of the popular literary magazines? I shall never forget the feelings with which I read his effusion entitled "The Minorca" in the Club catalogue of 1900. The sentiment it awakened was absolutely indescribable. I quote from it:

"The chicken is our kindest friend,
Our many wants she will tend;
She's ready at our every call
To drop an egg and let it fall."

Thus readeth the first stanza.

There is nothing like Asthmalene. It brings instant relief, even in the worst cases. It cures when all else fails.

The Rev. C. F. Wells, of Villa Ridge, Ill., says: "Your trial bottle of Asthmalene received in good condition. I cannot tell you how thankful I feel for the good derived from it. I was a slave, chained with putrid sore throat and Asthma for ten years. I despaired of ever being cured. I saw your advertisement for the cure of this dreadful and tormenting disease, Asthma, and thought you had overspoken yourselves, but resolved to give it a trial. To my astonishment, the trial acted like a charm. Send me a full-sized bottle."

Rabbi of the Cong. Bnai Israel.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3, 1901.

DRS. TAFT BROS'. MEDICINE CO.,

Gentlemen: Your Asthmalene is an excellent remedy for Asthma and Hay Fever, and its composition alleviates all troubles which combine with Asthma. Its success is astonishing and wonderful.

After having it carefully analyzed, we can state that Asthmalene contains no opium, morphine, chloroform or ether. Very truly yours.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO.

Gentlemen: I write this testimonial from a sense of duty, having tested the wonderful effect of your Asthmalene, for the cure of Asthma. My wife has been afflicted with spasmodic asthma for the past 12 years. Having exhausted my own skill as well as many others, I chanced to see your sign upon your windows on 150th street, New York, I at once obtained a bottle of Asthmalene. My wife commenced taking it about the first of November. I very soon noticed a radical improvement. After using one bottle her Asthma has disappeared and she is entirely free from all symptoms. I feel that I can consistently recommend the medicine to all who are afflicted with this distressing disease. Yours respectfully, O. D. PHELPS, M. D.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO. Feb. 5, 1901.

Gentlemen: I was troubled with Asthma for 22 years. I have tried numerous remedies, but they have all failed. I ran across your advertisement and started with a trial bottle. I found relief at once. I have since purchased your full-size bottle, and I am ever grateful. I have family of four children, and for six years was unable to work. I am now in the best of health and am doing business every day. This testimony you can make such use of as you see fit.

Dominique Leghorns.

Editor American Fancier: I would like to write a brief note for your paper on the Dominique Leghorns—an old Standard breed which American fanciers seem to be sadly neglecting. They seem to have been very nearly totally eclipsed by the Browns and Whites in the great popularity of these two latter varieties during the last twenty years. Some years ago a writer on the subject of Dominique Leghorns said that inasmuch as no specimens of the breed had been imported they therefore must be a "sport" or a cross between the Black and White. What of that? What are the Rose Comb Leghorns of to-day but crosses. If I know my book, the Single Comb Leghorns are the only "real thing" so far as the original breed is concerned. For instance, we take the Buff Leghorns as now bred. Did they come from real Leghorn headquarters i. e., Province of Leghorn, Italy? If our memory serves us correctly the Belgians were first to introduce the Buff and the first specimens brought to America would hardly pass for buff as we have it perfected to-day. I dare say there was "a cross" in the production of the Buff. Every one of our best general purpose breeds are the results of crossing—Rocks, 'Dottes and the whole shooting match. If the Dominique Leghorn be "a cross" between the Blacks and Whites then they are "pure Leghorn" surely, and after all it's only a matter of color in plumage. If a "sport" from either, then still "pure Leghorn," the fact is, those fanciers who have given them an impartial trial can but admit their useful qualities and general Leghorn characteristics. True, their plumage is of the sober every day sort of a color, but well suited for the general surroundings of the average farm house and yard, and a flock of these fowls present a very handsome and satisfactory appearance to the farm poulterer. Of course, the natural trend is to combine beauty with utility, and it's well, providing we do not impair constitutional vigor and stamina. We Americans, at least have become "cranks" on White, Partridge and Buff colors. How beautiful a flock of well bred Barred Plymouth Rocks—our own American Rocks—in their sober attire, and a fowl of the very highest utilitarian qualities It isn't all in color. Dominique Leghorn breeders let your light shine. IRA W. SHAW.

Poultry Experiments

EXPERIMENTS IN BROODING INCUBATOR CHICKS.

In none of our experiments did the pens for larger chicks exceed five feet by nine feet in their measurements; this gave forty five square feet for each. In such pens we carried in the neighborhood of fifty chickens and raised club-house broilers, weighing from fourteen to sixteen ounces, in eight weeks. However, larger space would be preferable.

In the first experiment seven chicks were taken, placed in a screen-covered box six feet long, three feet wide and one foot high. The bottom was covered with a layer of dirt about two inches deep. Owing to the inconvenience of furnishing the hover heat by a kerosene lamp, other means had to be resorted to. For the extemporized hover an ordinary soap box, thirty-three by twenty by nine inches was used. In the bottom, which became the top of the hover, two holes were cut which were of the proper size to set pails of water into, to within a couple of inches of the top. The whole was made to fit as tightly as possible, in order to prevent any escape of air. In the side two orifices, about four inches wide and six high were made, to permit the passage of chicks. Doors sliding up and down were fitted to these. The boards sawed out of the holes in the bottom were fitted into covers for the pails. Water at a temperature of about 140 dg. was put into the pail, the covers inserted, and then the whole hover blanketed with papers, rough coats, or whatever was at hand. The pail used was of papier mache. This substance seemed to hold the heat of the water admirably, allowing but little to escape, and permitted the chicks to press up against it for warmth. Wooden pails would undoubtedlv have done as well. Metal pails would, however, have permitted of the escape of the heat too fast and compelled refilling with hot water more frequently. They would also have been too hot for the chicks to press against. By experiment it was found that with proper covering the heat would carry sufficiently well from ten o'clock in the evening until seven or eight the next morning; that is, in the room whose temperature did not fall below 60 dg. When the temperature of the room was raised to 75 or 80 dg. the chickens did not seem to need additional heat. The pails were used as a reserve heat during the night-time, when the temperature fell below 68 dg , and for the early days of the chicken's life, when 85 dg. in the hovers was maintained. A record was kept of the temperature of the hovers by thermometers inserted through corks and let into especially prepared holes through the side. It was found that when water was put in the pail at about 125 dg., and thirty or more chicks used, the temperature would be held at from 85 to 90 dg. throughout the night, rarely falling below 75 dg. The heat was saved by shutting down the wooden shutters in the hovers to within half an inch of the floor during the first day or two. Afterwards they were partially raised as the chickens grew larger, until at the end of a week the shutters were left completely up

The chicks' food was carefully sifted, grains about half the size of a wheat kernel being used. For this lot quite a variety of food was used: corn, wheat, flaked oats, millet, rice, lettuce and occasionally a piece of corn bread and potatoes from the table. About half of them weighed over a pound by the seventh week. Their growth in feather and weight seemed marvellous

For the second experiment a lot of five, which was the result of a hatch from a test of a dozen eggs In a small incubator, was taken. To accommodate these a board partition was put in the box hover, separating it into two compartments, one much smaller than the other. The young chicks were put in the smaller compartment and thrived well for a time. They were boarded in from the others in the brooder in a rather narrow space and somewhat neglected. To make the water keep warm longer it was put in hotter—about 165 degrees. This made the compartment so hot that the young chicks were overheated and forced out outside, but one survived. Each of the five caught cold and died of lung diseases similar to the outbreak in the lot first mentioned. While this experiment was a failure, so far as raising these chickens was concerned, it taught that more careful attention had to be paid to the heating of the hover and the maintenance of a rather narrow variation between it and the outside temperature.

For the third experiment ninety-six chicks were handed me from an incubator experiment. For these two other brooders were prepared of the same dimensions as the first. The hovers, however, instead of being made with double places for pails were provided each with a single orifice. At first great pains were taken to keep the temperature of the hover at 85 deg. by frequently renewing the water. This was continued for about two weeks. In later experiments we learned to control the temperature of the room and make it more uniform, and found that it was unnecessary to carry any extra heat during the daytime and that it was better for the chicks to have the room temperature correct than the hover temperature too high. At about 72 deg. the chickens remained continually in the brooder box, scratching, dusting or resting as their needs demanded, and apparently enjoying themselves to the best advantage. Indeed, under such conditions of temperature it was soon learned that the trouble to be expected would be from overfeeding, lack of exercise, and perhaps a lack of the green stuff which was used in June. In one of our experiments the water pail was put in but two nights, the first two after hatching. These chickens grew well and sustained the least loss of any, although they were apparently weaker at hatching. Under other conditions, however, the necessity of hover heat seemed to arise from the illness of the animals due to conditions other than the brooding or feeding.

By attending to the temperature of the room, which during the months of January and February would otherwise have been subject to considerable change, and by procuring for them green food, in this case lettuce, in addition to their cracked corn, cracked wheat, and oatmeal and scraps, some of these were raised to broiler sizes in eight and nine weeks, with a loss in number of about 12 per cent. Counting all of those which did not mature well, on account of lameness, malformed beaks, and other mechanical causes, the loss would not exceed 15 per cent. While these chickens were hatched on the 17th and 18th of January, I find, on consulting my notes, that when dismissed from my laboratory on March 16 they averaged 9 oz. each. Ten selected weighed 14.37 oz. each. These chickens were not subjected to a feeding experiment, and, in fact, during the experiment underwent some severe conditions, for their boxes were set back in the room away from the light and as they became larger they became overcrowded. This condition, owing to new experiments then undertaken, could not be corrected for these chicks. Since the experiment was to ascertain under what conditions we can sustain life and not how much weight they could be made to gain under those conditions, I considered it fairly satisfactory.

In the fourth experiment 154 chickens, a part of those which had been incubated by the poultry class of 1901, were placed in four brooders. Among these were weaklings and cripples from various causes, mainly incubation. Over 140 of these were carried through to the eighth week successfully. These became the material for a feeding experiment, and an inspection of my notes shows that they matured as club-house broilers in from eight to ten weeks.

In the fifth experiment a lot of forty-seven was received, and in about the fifth week of the brooding time discharged without loss.

In the sixth experiment, of a lot of four hundred chicks received March 2d three hundred and sixty-three were alive March 16th, two weeks afterward; of these one hundred and twenty-eight were removed to the brooder house which was started up at that time. On March 30th, over four weeks afterward, two hundred and twenty five were in the laboratory, giving a loss of forty-seven for those retained in the laboratory, or less than twelve per cent. Indeed, this would include the entire loss on those chickens. They matured rapidly and some made club-house broilers in eight weeks.

American Incubators Abroad

A great deal is said these days about the expansion of American trade, and everyone who has studied the figures showing the growth in American exports, has been astonished at its magnitude. American incubator manufacturers have not been behind other lines in this respect. This is especially true of the Prairie State Incubator Company of Homer City, Pennsylvania, which has extended its distributing points in Europe, Australia, South Africa and South America, besides sending many smaller lots of one or two machines to individual poultrymen in the same countries. Since the 1st of August of this year, their foreign demand has been especially heavy, and many car-load shipments have been made from Homer City.

The new catalogue of the Prairie State Incubator Company is now on the press, and, by the-way, we understand it to be the handsomest book ever printed by an incubator company. It will contain good illustrations showing some of these shipments. These, however, are only a few of the hundreds of fine pictures in this handsome book, which will be sent free to all our readers who request it. Ask for the 1902 catalogue, and copy will be sent as soon as it is off the press. We advise your sending in your name at once. Address the Prairie State Incubator Co., Homer City, Penn.

WINTER COURSES IN AGRICULTURE FOR YOUNG FARMERS.

It is probably true that the state of New York presents greater diversity of agricultural interests than any other state in the Union. Everything that can be grown in a temperate climate can be grown here and is being produced within the state's borders. Many branches of agriculture have become specialized industries in certain districts. Thus we find noted potato growing districts, famous bean sections, regions where the apple or the peach or the grape are staples, where dairying is paramount, or poultry culture is of chief importance. We should not forget the smaller industries. as the toothsome celery, the odorous onion, the aromatic mint, or the useful teasel.

This great diversity demands wide culture on the part of our soil tillers. There is demand for education in agriculture today such as never before existed. There is greater variety of agricultural pursuit, there is keener competition; in short, the skill of an expert is required, and the opportunity for acquiring this knowledge is at hand.

We have received within a few days an outline of the winter course in general agriculture offered by the College of Agriculture of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. It seems to us that this course of study, with the practice included in shop and greenhouse, is admirably adapted to the needs of the younger farmers of the present day. It covers farm practice, dairy husbandry, poultry keeping and horticulture. It is open to men and women and free to all. The course begins in January and lasts for eleven weeks. Send for a prospectus.

Rochester, N. Y.

Editor American Fancier: The premium list for the great and only Rochester show has made its appearance. It contains the most tempting array of cash, silver cups and other valuable specials ever offered by any association in New York state. Space forbids entering into details but one can form an idea from the fact that the state cups of the American Barred and Buff Rock Clubs respectively, have been chosen by a majority of their members to be competed for at this show. Aside from these two valuable trophies, two other silver cups beside abundant cash and other specials have been offered.

Forty dollars in cash is offered in the Black Minorca classes besides a valuable silver cup. Every class and variety throughout the entire premium list is thus primed to the bursting point with cash, silver cups and desirable merchandise. The winners of first and second prizes will receive handsome ribbons, and in addition to these, a large orange ribbon suitably inscribed in black letters, will be placed on the best bird in each variety throughout the poultry and pigeon classes.

Pigeons have been well provided for and a large exhibit is assured. One hundred and fifty dollars in cash has been offered in addition to several fine silver cups. The Defender Homing Club and the Rochester Flying Club will make special exhibits including the world's record homer for 150 miles. The judges will be Zimmer, Butterfield, Quilhot and Burgott on poultry and W. J. Stanton, George E. Peer and Amos Mack on pigeons.

If the breeders of fancy poultry in this country and Canada are desirous of competing in the warmest company, where they will receive courteous treatment and the best of care taken of their birds, where cash and silver cups, not promises, are offered, where the premiums are paid on the second day of the show, and where the premiums are awarded according to merit only, they must come to be exhibited at the great Rochester show, January 10th to 16th, 1902. Re-Judging Minorcas at the Pan.

Editor American Fancier: Seeing Mr. J. P. Hilldorfer's and Mr. G. Wash. Moore's letters in the American Fancier regarding the awards made on Black Minorca cockerels at the Pan, I wish to answer same. Now, for the benefit of Mr. Moore and the public (Mr. Hilldorfer does not need any explanation, as Mr. George Burgott had written him fully explaining the situation), I will say, in the first place, the Minorca cockerels of Maunder & Green were penned with the Langshans through some mistake or other; they were entered legally and were there on good time, but could not be found on the judge's book owing to a mistake of one of the girls employed by the Pan officials and said party failed to place Maunder & Green's entries on the books. Whether anyone enters a string or only one bird and pays his or her entry fee and birds are there on time to be judged, I will ask whether such birds should not be judged? I claim they should be judged as well as any other. Now, our birds in Minorca cockerels were penned with the Langshans, and when I arrived on Thursday morning and found the Minorcas judged and missed our two cockerels I began to hunt them up, but failed to locate them. Mr. Lamon was the man who found them for me, and after looking over the class I knew our birds had not been in competition with the balance of the class. I immediately began to hunt the matter up. I found Mr. Zimmer, the judge, and called his attention to the case. He went back to the building in which the Minorcas were cooped and I took him over with the Langshans and asked him whether the two Minorca cockerels he was looking at were judged by him in competition with the others He said: "No; they could not be found." I immediately went to Superintendent

Burgott, in company with Mr. Zimmer, and demanded that our birds should go into competition with the rest of the class, as our entries were made legally and the birds were there in good time. The blame lay with the employes of the Exposition Company. Now, I will let anyone decide whether our birds were not entitled to be looked at by the judge. I will go a little further and state that we also had a hen in the Minorca class and she was not judged, for the reason that her entry number was not on the judge's book and, of course, he passed her. Am I to stand for all these mistakes of the Pan officials or their subordinates? I have said nothing regarding our hen until now. When Mr. Hilldorfer states he does not know what was done after Thursday night I will tell him. Nothing was done after Thursday 2 p. m., yes 1 p. m., as the class had been re-judged at Mr. Burgott's request before the above hour, and Mr. Zimmer was the judge who did the work. I wish further to state at the time the class was re-judged Mrs. Monroe, the winner of first in same class, was present, and she will no doubt verify all my statements regarding this matter.

Now, I trust Mr. G. Wash. Moore will be satisfied with this explanation, as he can see by my statement that the class was re-judged within five hours and not left two days, as Mr. Hilldorfer asserts, and I say that when a party enters birds at any show and they are there on time, and through shortsightedness of some employes of the association they fail to get judged with the class they are entered in, and the mistake is found out within five hours, they are certainly entitled to go into competition with the others.

Regarding Mr. Hilldorfer's statement that our name does not appear in the catalogue, I will ask him if there are not others whose names do not appear in the catalogue as well as ours. As for my making a lot of fuss, this is the first time anyone has seen my name attached to a statement of any kind regarding this matter.

Before I close, let me say that Mr Zimmer did not want to re-judge the class and wished for some other judge to be called in to rectify the error, although no error on his part.

Big Show at Harrisburg, Pa.

Middletown, Nov. 20.—A largely attended meeting of the Dauphin County Poultry and Pet Stock Association was held here last evening, which was attended by members from Harrisburg, Steelton, Highspire and this place. Further arrangements were completed for the second annual exhibition at Russ Hall, Harrisburg, week of January 21st. As the State Poultry Association will meet in that city at the same time, this show promises to be one of the most important of the season. Reports presented at last evening's meeting indicate that the exhibits will be larger and there will be fancy stock from all over the state. An interesting feature at this exhibit will be the dog show. The association decided to enter the American Kennel Club and the exhibition will be under its sanction. This means that the judge selected to decide the merits of the numerous dogs will be one of the best in the country. This exhibit of prize dogs will include all of Harrisburg's champions.

There will be hundreds of special and regular prizes and those who enter will have a lively competition. In a few days the premium list will be handed to the printer, and these books will be sent to all poultry and pet stock fanciers. Applications for space have been coming in daily and a committee was appointed to arrange for additional room. It will be necessary for the association to have their headquarters on the second floor at Russ Hall in order that the smaller rooms can be used for other exhibits. A large number of new members were admitted.

Sick Fowls and Their Management.

Feather Plucking and Diseased Feathers.—As a preventive to feather plucking many have advocated giving employment to the fowls, such as a scratching shed, with corn buried in it, and such like; others—and at one time we were amongst the number—have been under the impression that great thirst has caused the birds to assume this habit of plucking feathers from the bodies of others as well as their own. We are, however, now firmly convinced that neither the want of exercise or an insufficient supply of water has anything to do with the real cause of feather-plucking.

For many years we have always said that insects were the primary cause of feather-plucking. We have never yet found a bird just starting to be feather-plucked that a good dusting of insect powder would not have proved beneficial to it; and we, therefore, thought that a probable solution to the cause of this complaint was found in a fowl perceiving an insect crawling on the feather of another bird, plucked at the insect, and, in doing so, pulled out also the feather and swallowed both, and in course of a little time obtained a liking for the consumption of feathers. As a fact, we still believe this theory to be correct; but it only partially covers the cause of this detestable habit.

The Chief Cause.—We are indebted to Professor Theobald for further enlightenment on this subject. He states: "The disease, for such it is (not vice), is due to a minute sarcopt mite, known scientifically as the Sarcoptes lævis." The mites are to be found at the base of the feather shafts, amongst a white powdery substance. It is owing to the irritation caused by these mites that the fowls pull out their own feathers and those of others. As Professor Theobald says, "It is well known that animals will destroy one another's parasites, and this possibly may be the same in poultry."

After reading the above, we closely studied certain pens of feather-pluckers, but failed to detect a single bird in the act of plucking out its own feathers, though we saw innumerable instances of birds plucking out the feathers of others. All these birds were, however, more or less feather-plucked before we commenced our observations. We, therefore placed two other hens that were quite free of the disease into two pens that were affected. For ten days after not only were there no signs of these two plucking out their own feathers, but what appeared more strange, none of the habitual feather-pluckers in the same pens attempted to strip the new comers, though they had after the first day or so settled all down comfortably together. But at the expiration of this time we distinctly saw one bird pull out three feathers, with difficulty, from its crop, and the other two or three feathers from its fluff. This was in the afternoon of one day, and next morning by twelve o'clock one of the birds was almost naked.

As these mites breed very rapidly, and as they are easily transmitted—especially during copulation—to others, all the inhabitants of the same pen are liable to quickly become similarly affected unless proper precautions are immediately taken to prevent it.

Prevention and Cure.—If it be possible to detect the bird on the first appearance of the symptoms of this disease, the removal of the same would prevent it from spreading to the occupants of the same pen. But the probability is, that in most cases where feather-plucking is observed, that the mites have already secured a certain footing on others besides the one who gives evidence of the complaint. The safest plan is, therefore, to give each bird a dressing with one part creosote and thirty parts vaseline. Rub well into the roots of the feather. As a rule, the dressing in this manner of the neck, breast, abdomen and "parson's nose" is sufficient. Professor Theobald also says that the mites readily yield to treatment with oil of cloves rubbed into the invaded area.

Another Cause.—It is evident from the writings of the above named authority that he has little faith in the theory that the blood at the base of the shafts is ever a cause of feather-plucking. We have, however, not the slightest hesitation in asserting that not infrequently is this the sole cause; but, as a rule, when such is the cause, the effects are seen only in plucked hackle or crest. It is never wise to keep Houdans or Polish together in close confinement during the moulting season; especially is it undesirable to keep a cock bird with hens, as the temptation to pluck the juicy quills filled with blood growing on his head is almost irresistible. But this form of feather-plucking happens, as a rule, at a different period of the year to what has been described as the feather-plucking disease. The latter is mostly confined to the spring and early summer months.

Bars Across Feathers, etc.—It is not uncommon to find that when a fowl has moulted into its new plumage that there are bars or notches quite hollow in the webbing, as if the same had been cut out. Usually, too, such a bird takes considerable time to moult fully, or, rather, we should say, to fully grow its new feathers. It seems at times as if there is something that prevents the sheath of the feather from bursting. Instead of being juicy, it is dried up. We believe that mites (probably the same that cause feather-plucking) are alone accountable.

Now, it would not do to adopt the remedy previously advocated on a bird that had partially grown its new feathers, and one that we desired to exhibit. The mixture would spoil the look of the plumage. But to prevent such a spoliation of feathers in a bird that we hope to exhibit after it has moulted, act on the instructions previously given, just before an old bird starts the moult, or, in the case of a young bird, just previous to its commencing to moult into adult plumage.—E Cobb, F. Z. S., in Feathered World, England.

Annual Meeting of the American White Minorca Club.

Editor American Fancier: The annual meeting of the American White Minorca Club will be held in connection with the New York show at Madison Square Garden, January 14 to 18, 1902. The meeting will take place Friday, Jan. 17, at 3 p. m. As matters of importance are to come up and some changes to the by-laws are contemplated, it is desired that all members attend this meeting. Breeders who wish to become members should do so at once, in order that they may compete for club prizes.

A Settin' Hen.

When a hen is bound to set,
Seems as though 'tain't etiket
Dowsin' her in water till
She's connected with a chill.
Seems as though 'twas skursely right,
Givin' her a dreadful fright,
Tyin' rags around her tail,
Poundin' on an old tin pail.
Chasin' her around the yard—
Seems as though 'twas kind of hard
Being kicked and slammed and shooed
'Cause she wants to raise a brood.
I s.i'd say it's gettin' gay
Jest 'cause natur' wants its way.
While ago my neighbor, Penn,
Started bustin' up a hen;
Went to yank her off the nest;
Hen, though, made a peck and jest
Grabbed his thumbnail good and stout—
Liked to yanked the darn thing out.
Penn, he twitched away and then
Tried again to grab that hen.
But, by ginger, she had spunk,
'Cause she took and nipped a chunk
Big's a bean right out his palm,
Swallered it and cool and calm
Hi'sted up and yelled "Cah-hah!"
Sounded like she said "Hoo-rah."
Wal, sir, when that hen done that,
Penn, he bowed, took off his hat.
"Set," says he, "gol darn ye, set!"
Spunk jest suits him, you can bet.

PIGEONS.

Lofty Thoughts of the Editor

The president of the American Tumbler Club writes that he is going to offer a silver cup, to be won three times, for the exhibitor who wins the most points in showing at the club's annual meet at Boston, 1902, and at such future shows as the club may meet at until won outright. It must be won three times before becoming the property of the winner, and Messrs. Atwood and Gorse have agreed not to compete for it for two years, which will give a good open field to compete for it and no one will have a cinch. All Tumblers are eligible to score points in the competition, viz., Muff Legs, Clean Legs and Short Faces. Tumbler fanciers have many good things to thank Mr. Atwood for, but this latest mark of generosity will cap them all, and it does look as if the Tumblers at Boston in 1902 would be the real article.

The Owl Club is moving along nicely, as will be seen by reading the communications from the secretary (Mr. George Feather). We understand that Mr. Feather is to judge Owls at New York, while Mr. Kennedy will judge them at Boston.

Mr. H. D. Kirkover, Jr., is offering a cup at Boston for the best young Clean Leg Black Self, to be won three times, while at Chicago he is to offer a cup for the best young Self, any color.

Mr. Muir, the secretary of the Western Tumbler Club, writes that he has more specials offered by the members of the club than ever before and that Tumblers at Chicago were to be just as warm as ever happened in the West.

The Pigmy Pouter Club has voted to meet at Boston and they have also voted for Mr. Joseph Bardroff to judge them, which means there will be a grand lot of the little fellows for "Little Joe" to adjudicate upon.

We have not heard much about the Magpie, Oriental Frill, Eastern Fantail, and several other clubs. They ought to take a tip from the Tumbler clubs and not wait until a week or two before the entries close before writing something of interest about their favorites. Nothing can be accomplished by such methods, but if they would now and again do something and show others they themselves were enthusiasts there would be an impression go out that there was some pleasure in keeping the class of birds they were writing about. There is only the opposite effect from a close-mouthed policy that does the breed no good in particular.

We hear Washington had a very nice show, but the boys did not support it in the manner they ought to have done. There was a good turnout of Pigmy Pouters and Tumblers, but the other breeds did not come up to expectations. We hear that Mr. George Eustis and Mr. Twombly were on together and were put through the same sprouts that "Old Jack" went through, which, to put it mild, is a hint that Washington is not slow and the resident fanciers are good hearted.

The next show of importance, or, to put it in another way, the next large show is Philadelphia, and we hope pigeon men will turn out a good entry, as Mr. Cheston has shown his interest in pigeons to the extent of placing that department in the hands of a pigeon man, who all may rest assured will do all within his power for the care of such birds as are sent. We feel sure that Mr. Witmer will let nothing remain undone that can be done at the Philadelphia show to make all visitors and birds exhibited comfortable. We hear that the veteran fancier, Mr. Hoskins, is down as the Pouter judge

American Owl Club.

Editor American Fancier: Am pleased to announce that the following gentlemen fanciers have been unanimously elected to membership in the above club, viz., Mr. Thomas Willetts. Lowell, Mass.; Mr. J. M. Skiles, Pittsburg, Pa., and Mr. Harry Edelman, Allentown, Pa. Would be pleased to hear from other breeders, as it is the desire of the officers and members of this club that all those interested in any of the varieties of the Owl family should become members of the club. To all such the secretary would be pleased to mail constitution and by-laws, list of officers and members, and copy of our standard with cut of an ideal Owl; also give any other information required.

The three silver cups offered by the club at the Pan American Exposition, held at Buffalo, N. Y., Oct. 21 to 26, 1901, were awarded as follows: For best English Owl, to Dr. Charles H. A. Meyer, Baltimore, Md.; for the best African Owl, to Mr. George W. Eckert, Allentown, Pa. These cups were delivered to the winners on the grounds. The cup for the best Chinese Owl was withheld on account of lack of competition, and this cup has been voted to be placed on the same variety at the club's coming annual meet at New York next January.

It will be remembered that the New York and Boston shows unfortunately come on the same dates this year, so it is desired that all members who can will make a liberal entry at either one or both of these events. The club will again place six of their sterling silver dessert spoons on young birds of 1901 hatch at Boston and one in each of the young bird classes at the New York show.

PET STOCK.

The Young Belgian.

Editor American Fancier: The young Belgian hare should be left with its dam until about six weeks of age, in order that it may obtain all the nourishment necessary to insure a good start in life. The doe can be bred again when the young are a month old, and if they are taken away at six weeks of age it will give the doe two weeks of rest to get into good condition for the next litter. My practiee is to feed the does upon oats as grain, with hay or grass as coarse food. The young by the time they are four weeks of age will have to eat well and in two weeks more should be in first-class condition for weaning.

After the young Belgian is weaned I make no change in the diet. With good sound oats and plenty of hay or grass they will keep growing. I keep water before them all the time. It is very important to keep the young growing. A retardation in growth in early life may mean a loss in size at maturity, and size is an important and valuable characteristic. There is no danger of getting the Belgians too large—the danger lies in the opposite direction.

By the time that the young are three months old, and even earlier will do no harm, the sexes should be separated, the bucks being kept together and the does kept together. If both sexes are allowed to run together after they are three months old some precocious young buck may begin to annoy the does, and his constant attentions, if they do not cause the death of some, will interfere with his growth and with the growth of his companions. Bucks thus early separated from the does and kept away from them will dwell together in peace for an indefinite length of time.

At five months of age the breeder should be able to make a pretty accurate forecast of the probable quality of the young stock when arrived at maturity. And as soon as this can be done accurately a further separation should be made. The inferior does should be placed in an apartment by themselves and should be fattened for the table, the best does being allowed to remain together and being so fed that they will develop bone and muscle without adding much, if any, fat. In like manner the inferior bucks should be separated from the best, and, when it can be done, each of the bucks reserved for breeding or sale as breeders or exhibition specimens should be given a separate hutch. The inferior bucks should now be fattened, and if it is desired to keep them for some time, and the testicles have come down into view, it will be found advantageous to castrate them. Castration will keep them quieter and enable them to fatten more readily. This quietness of disposition and tendency to fatten will insure more rapid growth.

At seven months of age the sexes are both ready for breeding and those not suitable for breeding are ready for killing. Yet, it is even then advisable to wait from one to three months before putting them to breeding, in order to secure the most perfect development. If a doe is born in May, she will be seven months old the following December. But December would be a poor month to bring her to the buck, as she would almost be certain to lose her young. In such a case it would be well to defer breeding her till the following March, so that she would be ten months old when first served by the buck and eleven months old when she had her first litter in April. However advisable it may be to allow an old doe to have young in the winter months, it does not seem advisable to have a young doe produce her first litter in the winter months. She will be very apt to lose them. It will pay to wait until the weather is more suitable and allow her to keep on growing. But if she were born in July or August, she might be permitted to have her first litter in April, though she would not be quite so old. I regard it a safe practice to breed a doe at seven months of age and allow her to kindle at eight months, provided the kindling is done in moderate weather. A buck at seven months will be ready for service, but eight or nine months would be a better age. Early service by a buck has a tendency to check growth somewhat, but not so marked a tendency as is the case with the doe.

In the final selection of bucks and does the most rigorous care should be taken. Nothing but the very finest in bucks should be saved, because the demand for bucks is naturally much less than that for does, and it doesn't pay to keep along and feed a lot of simply good ones. A buck to be saleable should be exceptionally fine. There will be enough of the very best to meet all the demands of the trade. In the case of the does a less rigorous selection can be made and only the inferior ones need be rejected. Of those remaining two classes should be made, one including the finest specimens and selected with as much care as the bucks, and the other including all of the remaining good ones. The first class of does will be used for breeding exhibition specimens; the second may be sold for the production of market stock.

In selecting the young Belgians it may happen that there will be a doe or buck that has a serious defect and yet is one that the breeder will need to preserve for his own use. For example, suppose his stock is somewhat deficient in size and he finds among his young does one that is remarkably large, excellent in every respect, but in the possession of a white forefoot. A white forefoot is a serious defect. But the extra size of this doe may make it advisable to preserve her and use her in the rabbitry. Such a doe should not, of course, be offered for sale, but she may prove valuable to the owner. I know one breeder who had such a doe, disqualified by a white foot, but he considered twenty dollars for her a small sum. She was able to add qualities to his herd which he could not afford to lose, and even if she did occasionally produce a disqualified young one, the remainder of the litter made it worth while to keep her. While I do not advocate, as a rule, the use of any breeding stock possessing disqualifications, and while I believe in the severest culling of the young, yet I know that occasionally it may be of advantage to preserve a disqualified specimen in order to secure qualities which cannot be so readily secured in any other way. But the breeder who makes use of disqualified specimens will do well not to parade that fact ostentatiously before the public. I know of one breeder who made public the fact that he every year used disqualified specimens as breeders, and I know that he lost trade by advertising the fact. Yet he so used these objectionable breeders that his stock became what stock of the kind should be, and his stock was able to win its full share of the prizes. If one must use disqualified specimens, let him do it with discretion, keep them out of sight as much as possible, and keep his own counsel. Don't ever offer such specimens for sale, even though they will produce the best results, simply because the general public will misunderstand and misrepresent you. And never use them for breeding, unless it is absolutely necessary to do so to secure some desired end. And when that end has been secured get rid of the disqualified animals as quickly as possible.

By treating the young Belgian in the manner indicated, the breeder will secure well developed specimens and will be able to place upon the market, or add to his breeding establishment, stock that will increase his reputation as a breeder and command the best of the ruling prices. The slight delay which the full development of the young Belgian may cause will, in the end, be more than compensated for in the improvement manifested in his herd. A few months of waiting may add many dollars to the value of the young stock and its produce, and thus prove the best paid for time in the whole year.

THE SISTINE MADONNA IN NEEDLEWORK.

Famous painters have sought to copy Raphael's "Sistine Madonna," but have laid their brushes down in despair. And what painters have failed to do with the brush one woman has accomplished with her needle. Fraulein Clara Ripberger of Dresden, has dared to create—it is nothing less than a creation—this picture a second time. She spent between five and six years on her work. From the beginning she had unusual difficulties to surmount, and when the great undertaking was finished, and noted artists came and looked, they would not accept the word of the artist until they had examined both sides of the canvas and recognized that every square inch of the work was unmistakably done by the needle alone. The contention that the eyes at least had been painted had to be abandoned. Not a brushful of paint had touched the picture. Filoselle silk of various colors, and in stitches of various lengths, had wrought the marvel. There is no suggestion of tapestry or Gobelin work It is needle painting, not weaving, both in the flesh tones and expressions of the faces, and in the reproduction of the draperies. The soulful eyes of the Mother and the startled look of the Child are so admirably copied that one feels the full message of the spiritual truth, while the texture and color of the robes leave nothing to be desired. The first exhibition of the embroidered Madonna had not closed before the merit of the work was publicly acknowledged. The King and Queen of Saxony came to view the picture and complimented the embroiderer.

From Germany the picture was taken to St. Petersburg, where a large sum was offered for it. The owner declined to sell, and carried her treasure to London, where it was exhibited at Marlborough House before the Prince and Princess of Wales. From London it was taken to the Paris Exposition, and received the gold medal from the International Jury.—December Ladies' Home Journal.

MOUNTAINSIDE LOFTS and Poultry Yards, Mahwah, N. J., Havemeyer Bros., Proprietors; John Glasgow, Manager. Mountainside Lofts at the great Pan-American exhibition added another to their long l'st of past records in winnings in Game and Variety Bantams. Every exhibit, 30 birds, secured a prize including 13 firsts and 9 seconds; 42 birds and the National Bantam Association special for best Game Bantam in the show, any variety, and this in the hottest of hot competition. The Pan-American was no fall show but a strictly up-to-date high class exhibition. We have a surplus supply of high class stock and show Bantams for disposal (excepting Silver and Golden Duckwings) of all varieties, bred on the same lines as our winners at the Pan-American, that we are prepared to sell at reasonable prices consistent with quality. We sell no stock at less than $5 each. so don't write for any under that figure. We use the knife freely on all specimens not cheap at a five dollar bill and only sell what we know will do us credit and give the purchaser satisfaction. Early purchasers can buy from us specimens that can win in prize money what they pay for them before the show season is over, and have them to breed from afterwards, costing nothing All communications and inquiries for stock should be made to the manager to receive prompt attention. The best criterion of a breeder's stock i consistent winnings wherever exhibited with specimens bred on their own yards, and this the proprietors of Mountainside Lofts and Poultry Yards lay undisputed claim to. 28-37

CONKEY'S ROUP CURE, the only remedy positively known to cure Roup in all its forms as long as the fowl can see to drink. Simply put the cure in drinking water and the fowl will take its own medicine. For Canker, especially in pigeons, this remedy excels all others. One 50c. package makes 25 gallons of medicine. Directions with every package. If this fails to cure we refund the money. Post paid, small size, 50c, large size, $1. AGENTS WANTED. Do not send stamps.

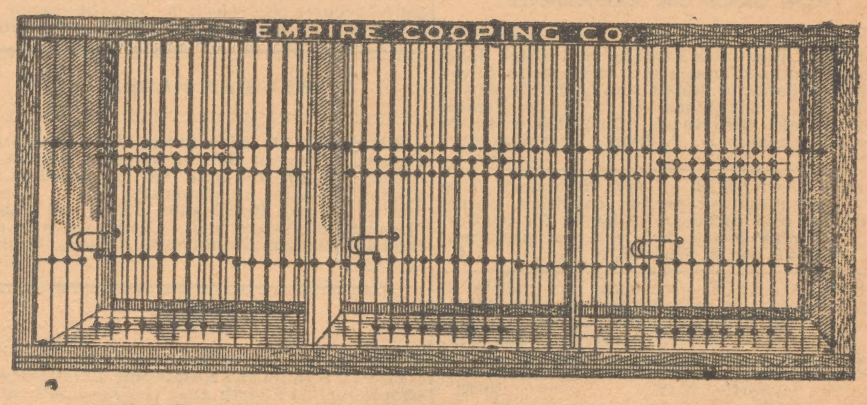
DEBONAIR BANTAMS. We've Got 'em Sure.



More of those STAY BLACK Black Cochin Bantams, and BETTER ONES than ever before. That at least means, those good enough to win at shows like New York, Rochester, etc., as we have bred such winners on several occasions; 100 of them. We never raised as many Wh. Polish Bantams in one season before, ALL with V combs and blue legs. We also have Golden and Silver Sebrights and Brown Red Games.

DEBONAIR BEAGLE HOUNDS.

60 of them old enough to hunt this fall; some of them hunting now and LOTS OF THEM fit to show in ANY COMPANY. All full pedigreed. Prices right for quality.

PAN-AMERICAN WINNERS!

Our Golden and White Wyandottes and Golden and Silver Sebrights are winners,—we won seven firsts and three seconds at the Pan on twelve entries. Our birds have won nearly two hundred premiums at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., and thousands of premiums at the leading shows for the past 17 years. We have over 1000 fine show and breeding birds for sale at very reasonable prices;—fine shape, color and lacing. No man has better nor holds a better show record. Our large circular showing 28 of our winners tells all about our stock. We also breed the finest Imported Belgian Hares, winners of many prizes. The Keller strain of the above breeds is known the world over. We export more Wyandottes than any other breeder..... eow 31-82
